Bates Denies He Used Dictographs In House Offices During Inquiry

By James D. Secrest.

Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee last night indicated he would fight to defend his record in the District milk investigation and asphalt paving negotiations by announcing flatly that he would not resign as Washington's "mayor."

Returning to the Capitol from West Virginia, he issued the following statement after several hurried conferences:

"Due to certain comments and developments relative to the milk inquiry and other matters before the District Committee, which took place in my absence from the city, I most emphatically state to the public that I will not entertain for a single moment the thought of resigning as chairman.

"I will in the future as in the past continue to honestly discharge the duties of this office."

Dictograph's Use Denied

Randolph's announcement came on the eve of a scheduled District Committee meeting today and followed an explosion in a new quarter over rumors that a dictograph had been installed during the milk inquiry in a room of the old House Office Building.

Chairman Bates of the sub-committee conducting the inquiry, immediately challenged his critics to produce proof of the allegation, and stated he will ask Kenneth Romney, House sergeant-at-arms, to appear before the sub-committee.

"At no time during this investigation have any sort of dictaphones or dictographs been placed in the House Office Building by my sub-committee or anyone working under our direction," he said.

"If the sergeant-at-arms has any proof of such activity, let him produce it at an open hearing of the committee."

Romney Claims Proof

Romney, who is titular head of the Capitol Police, told newspapermen that he had such proof, but declined to divulge its nature. He also said that other newspapermen had told him such wires were placed in the House Office Building by Metropolitan Police.

"A great many House members not associated with this inquiry are incensed over this disclosure," he said, "as it sets a very dangerous precedent. The Metropolitan Police have no jurisdiction whatsoever in Capitol buildings, and I have told them so repeatedly."

Romney said he understood that the wires had been placed by Capt. Floyd Truscott and Private Richard Felber, who have been working under direction of the Bates sub-committee and J. Edward Burroughs, committee counsel. Maj. Ernest F. Brown, superintendent of police,

John Barrymore Is Placed Under Oxygen Tent

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 31.—John Barrymore was placed under an oxygen tent periodically today.

Dr. T. J. Coogan reported the 57-year-old actor had a "narrow squeak" yesterday, when he suffered a heart attack, but was much better today. If he continued to improve, the physician added, he should be able to resume his role in "My Dear Children" next Monday.

Dr. Coogan and Dr. W. H. Highstone attributed Barrymore's heart condition to exhaustion. They ordered rest and a special diet and put him under the care of nurses.

An electro-cardiograph examination disclosed no coronary thrombosis, Dr. Highstone said, but indicated a weak heart muscle. They decided to use an oxygen tent, he explained, because of a deficiency of oxygen in the blood stream.

Navy Abandons Halliburton Search

The Navy yesterday abandoned search for Richard Halliburton's Chinese junk Sea Dragon, missing in the mid-Pacific since March 24.

Capt. Richmond K. Turner, of the Navy cruiser Astoria, reported to Secretary Swanson that he had covered an area of 182,000 square miles in the search. Thirteen were aboard, including Paul Mooney, son of Mrs. James Mooney, of 2550 University street northwest, former Central High and Catholic University student.

D. C. Man, 29, Is Questioned In Slaying

He Admits Presence In Tavern Where DiBlasi Had Fight

A 29-year-old District man last night surrendered to Montgomery County (Md.) police investigatin the mysterious death of Nicholas DiBlasi, 28, whose body was found in a feeder canal nr Brookmont, Md., Tuesday.

The man admitted to Montgomery County Police Chief Charles M. Orme that he was in DiBlasi's company in a tavern near Glen Echo shortly before the latter disappeared Sunday afternoon, it was learned.

He was taken to Bethesda police headquarters for questioning by Chief Orme and Sergeants Theodore F. Vollten and Leroy Rodgers. At the tavern, where he admitted being, an altercation involving DiBlasi is known to have occurred. The man had been held earlier at Rockville.

Chief State Medical Examiner Howard Maldies issued a certificate of "probable drowning" after an autopsy. Because of decomposition of the body, "we can tell nothing further than that," he declared, but said the body showed no evidence of violence. Previously police had indicated the body revealed discolorations pointing to foul play.

Department of Justice files revealed that the man held has a police record of arrests for offenses ranging from liquor law violations to petty larceny and assault.

After a two-hour grilling in which the man asserted he had become separated from Di Blasi after their auto hurtled down an embankment near the tavern, police decided to stage a re-enactment of events leading up to the accident today.

The man told a story of the two men hurrying away from the tavern after the altercation. After the crash they leaped from the car and ran through the woods, he said, but became separated.

School Blows Up; 57 Hurt, 3 May Die

53 Children Injured; Ohio Gas Blast Occurs as Janitor Burns Trash in Cellar

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Barberton, Ohio, May 31—Two children and a school janitor were near death and 54 other persons—51 children and four adults—were injured as a result of a blast which shattered a grade school here today.

The explosion caused by igniting escaped gas, tore the two-story frame structure apart. It was a former house being used for classes while a new building is being built.

The three not expected to live are Dorothy Young, 6; Frances Fisher, 7, and P. S. White, 59, the janitor.

Two teachers injured were Miss Mabelle Miller, 38, who suffered fractured leg and ribs as she was buried beneath a piano, and Miss Albertina Mills, 44, with possible fractured back.

H. P. White, an electrician working nearby, also was hurt.

Thirty-one in Hospitals

Thirty-one remained in hospitals tonight, several suffering fractures, many burns, and all shock.

Dozens of tots on the first floor dropped into the basement and were covered with debris.

The roof fell upon the mass of children and wreckage.

A carpenter foreman, John Ruhlen, working on the new building sent his men for help and went to the rescue. He said:

"I was on my hands and knees when I heard the explosion and the screaming. As I ran to the building the sides fell out and the roof came down with a second roar.

"Most of the buried children were caught under lath and plaster and desks which were not very heavy. Many of them slid or were blown out of the house.

"There were about 20 on the second floor and I believe some of them fell clear to the basement.

"I pushed a piano off a teacher and carried her and another teacher out. I took out about 15 little fellows.

"One of the worst parts of this is that some of the little girls probably will be disfigured for life."

Before Janitor White lapsed into unconsciousness because of burns, he said he had been burning papers in the basement when the blast let go.

"Marvelous There Weren't More"

"The whole basement must have been filled with gas," he said. "I'm sure it was a leaky main."

Miss Miller, told that three of her pupils might die, said, "It's marvelous that there weren't more than that.

"I don't understand why some of us were not killed. I certainly was very much buried under a piano."

Tomorrow was to have been the last day of school, except for a brief return Friday for report cards. Most of the children's parents are industrial workers.

An uninjured girl, 7-year-old Thelma Bavkov, described the blast like this:

"A big crash fell down and I jumped out the window."

Heat Here at 95, Record for Day; Man, 53, Faints

A 53-year-old man collapsed in the downtown area yesterday afternoon as the mercury soared to 95, highest for the year and the highest ever recorded here for May 31. Cosmis Darnis, of 1460 Park road northwest, was stricken at Fourteenth and G streets northwest and taken to Emergency Hospital for treatment.

The Weather Bureau announced that yesterday ended the driest May on record, with .41 of an inch of rain, as against a normal 3.7 inches. For today cooler weather and increasing cloudiness are forecast, with showers tomorrow.

Rulers Turn East on Tour Showing Signs of Fatigue

By Edward T. Folliard
A Staff Correspondent.

Aboard Royal Pilot Train en route to Jasper Park, Canada, May 31.—The triumphant tour of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth was turned toward Washington today.

In private conversations, the British sovereigns said that Washington, the city named after the man who led the revolution against George III, was the one that intrigued them most.

As the royal party left Victoria today to start the trip back East, it was revealed that efforts were being made to conserve the energy of Their Majesties, both of whom are showing signs of fatigue from the endless rounds of receptions and ceremonies which attended their 13-day westward journey from Quebec.

The Queen had managed to conceal the strain, but yesterday it was observed that she used an umbrella to lean upon during the presentation of colors at Beacon Hill Park. The King has also been visibly affected by the continual chain of formal functions.

Thus it was announced today that to ease the burden for Their Majesties, the royal train will not make any unscheduled stops before 10 a. m. and after dark on the eastward trip.

The official bulletin stated: "It is

FBI Inquiry Involves 30 D. C. Police

Gambling, Bribery Allegations Are Under Scrutiny

By John Singerhoff.

A Department of Justice investigation of allegations of gambling and graft-taking activities of more than 30 District detectives has been under way at police headquarters for the last three weeks, The Post learned yesterday.

G-men summoned several of the men to the Justice Department building and questioned them for several hours. It was said that one of the men, whose wife also is involved, is an official of the department and one of Police Supt. Maj. Ernest W. Brown's ace investigators.

The investigation, it was learned, came about from information received by Federal agents in the recent investigation of the Warring gang. Confidential records of Georgetown numbers operators are believed to have listed the names of detectives being paid "protection" money.

Chiefs Deny Knowledge

Both Maj. Brown and Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson denied any knowledge of the investigation. Brown said that two weeks ago two Justice agents spoke to him about alleged misconduct at Police Court and stated that it would be necessary to interrogate several policemen.

Maj. Brown said the agents informed him that his department was not involved in any way.

Despite several confidential conferences with Capt. Ira E. Keck and other Detective Bureau aides, Inspector Thompson also denied knowing of any Government investigation.

"I know they are not investigating me," Thompson stated, "and I feel reasonably sure of my men."

Inquiry Is Secret

The Post's informant said that the investigation had been conducted with utmost secrecy.

During the recent trial of the Warring brothers—Emmett, Leo and Charles—for violating the income tax laws, it was brought out that a large amount of the proceeds from their profitable numbers business was paid to policemen for protection. The Warrings, who refused to make known the identities of the police, claimed that the protection money was a cost of doing business.

It was hinted at the trial that Warring records contained the names of men on the pay roll of the gambling brothers. One list containing the names of many petty gamblers was revealed in open court, but the second record, containing the names of policemen, was never found.

South's Railways Offer Fare Cut

By the Associated Press.

The Interstate Commerce Commission announced yesterday the Southern railroads had filed a tariff for a 10 per cent reduction in round-trip coach fares.

Unless suspended by the commission, the tariff will become effective June 1. The present coach fare in the South is a cent and a half a mile but there is no round-trip fare.

Nichols Asks Stiffer D. C. Business Tax

Offers New Revenue Bill Eliminating Proposal for Levy On Retail Sales

A revised District revenue bill which substitutes a more stringent business privilege levy for the proposed 2 per cent retail sales tax was introduced in the House late yesterday by Chairman Nichols, of the House sub-committee on fiscal affairs.

After lying dormant for weeks, following a row within the full District Committee, the bill was revived, and Chairman Nichols stated that he would try to have it approved by the full sub-committee this week.

The substitution of the gross receipts tax for the sales tax was the only substantial change in the measure, but the business privilege levy itself was altered materially from the present tax.

Under the revised gross receipts tax professional men and others who sell services rather than goods will be required to pay a tax of eight-tenths of 1 per cent or double the maximum levy placed on businessmen.

Graduated Tax Altered

The present four-tenths of 1 per cent on business is retained as to types of business in which capital investment is the primary element. The graduated tax on dealers in goods, wares and merchandise is altered from the present schedule and provides as follows:

Where the spread between cost and sales price does not exceed 4 per cent, the tax will be one-tenth of 1 per cent of gross receipts in excess of the $2,000 primary exemption.

Where the spread is between 4 and 8 per cent, the tax shall be two-tenths of 1 per cent.

Where the spread is from 8 to 12 per cent, the tax shall be three-tenths of 1 per cent.

Where the spread is in excess of 12 per cent, the tax shall be four-tenths of 1 per cent.

Besides the professional men, the eight-tenths of 1 per cent tax is applied to a fourth or catch-all class of persons who may not fall within the categories of strict business or professional men.

Income Tax Credits

The bill allows credits under the income tax and the corporate tax for payment of the business privilege tax.

Other taxes carried in the original revenue bill which are retained in the revised version are the income tax on earned incomes above $10,000 and unearned incomes above $500, the parking lot tax, the revised utility levies, and revisions in the inheritance, estate, and gift taxes.

The Nichols bill is expected to encounter the opposition of Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, who has announced previously that he would fight any move to renew the business privilege tax. He said he will insist on a graduated income tax beginning at $2,500.

Snapping Turtle Sent Here Named Public Grouch No.1

Fifteen pounds of fighting meanness, Public Grouch No. 1 arrived in Wasnington yesterday and immediately began trying to commit mayhem at the Commerce Building aquarium.

"Can you think of a better name for him than that?" challenged Director Fred Orsinger, side-stepping nimbly to avoid losing a hunk of ankle to the sour-tempered alligator snapping turtle.

The specimen was sent up here from the Bureau of Fisheries station at Lyman, Miss. His shell, which is a light brown and deeply serrated, is about a foot long. One thinks he is a big turtle until Orsinger reminds that this one is still a youngster of a mere 30 years and, if he lives, may reach a weight of 140 pounds and a length of nearly a yard.

Macrochelys lacertina, which is the ominous zoological equivalent of alligator snapping turtle, has no teeth but its razor-edge mandibles and powerful jaws can take off a hand or foot as neatly as if it were done by surgery. Nature gave it a queer little appendage inside the mouth which helps the reptile catch its food. (Picture on Page 10.)

Turn Army on Communists, Moseley Says, Defending Bund

Calls N. Y. Rally 'Impressive;' Laments Roosevelt Attitude

Maj. Gen. George Van Horn Moseley, retired commander of the Fourth Corps Area, told the Dies committee yesterday that the only purpose of the German-American Bund is "to see to it that the Communists shall not take over this country."

The 64-year-old former officer, whose name has been linked in previous testimony with leaders of anti-Semitic and anti-Communist movements, expressed his belief that a recent rally of the bund in New York was "a very impressive patriotic meeting."

Moseley, his blue eyes snapping from behind horn-rimmed spectacles, declared the bund was merely the "antitoxin" to fight the "disease of Communism." The organizations of the "right," he said, are "trying to sustain our democracy—these others are trying to destroy it."

Moseley charged that his commander in chief, President Roosevelt, could meet the alleged Communist menace "in five minutes" by discharging from Government service "every Communist and every person who gives aid and comfort

Age Pensions Increase Before House

Committee Meets Today as Townsend Plan Faces Defeat

By Robert C. Albright.

Reopening of old age benefit features of the social security act was proposed last night as the Townsend old age pension plan moved through tempestuous debate toward certain defeat in the House today.

Denounced by Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, as "iniquitous legislation" that would "wreck the Government" and tax small business out of existence, the Townsend bill, with all amendments barred, faced a final vote shortly after the House convenes at 11 a. m.

Although decisive rejection of the Townsend plan was taken for granted, Representative Dingell (Democrat), of Michigan, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, said he will ask that group today to raise the Federal contribution toward old age benefits under the social security act from $15 to $20.

Predicts House Approval

The committee meets this morning to consider a final report on social security act amendments already estimated to provide $1,755,000,000 in increased general benefits in the next five years, while saving employers and workers some $1,285,000,000 in taxes in three years.

Dingell, who said a similar motion recently lost on a tie vote, predicted the House will approve the increased pension when the liberalized amendments are called up next week.

He estimated his move to increase the Federal outlay to $20 a month, making possible a $40-a-month pension in States that match that amount, would cost an additional $5,000,000. Opposed to the Townsend plan, Dingell advised the step to offset certain efforts to further

U.S.-Indorsed Loans Urged For Business

Senate Sub-Committee Hears Arguments For Mead Measure

By the Associated Press.

Four members of Congress testified yesterday that small business and industry would put billions of now idle dollars to work if the Government insured loans granted to such enterprises by private banks.

They urged a Senate Banking and Currency sub-committee to approve legislation that would allow the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to insure such loans in much the same manner as the Federal Housing Administration now insures mortgages on homes.

Senator Mead (Democrat), New York, author of the legislation, said that many of the 400,000 small businesses scattered throughout the country provided "the bulk of employment and prosperity for an entire community."

Insurance Up to 90 Per Cent

The Mead bill would permit the RFC to insure 90 per cent of loans to a business and industry up to $1,000,000, with interest limited to a maximum of 4 per cent, and repayment from one to ten years.

Government insurance of these loans, he added, would provide the little fellow with credit facilities "equal to those enjoyed by his bigger brothers."

Joining Mead in his plea were Senator Pepper (Democrat), Florida, and Representatives Allen (Democrat), Pennsylvania, and Jeffries (Republican), New Jersey, all of whom have introduced similar legislation.

Points to Idle Cash

Calling attention to the billions of dollars now piled up in banks and other institutions, Pepper said this demonstrated "our present banking system is absolutely inadequate to furnish credit needs of

U. S. May Train Specialists In Field; Ordway Offered Task

Plans are afoot to have Government workers go to school, and it may be that one of five or six large cities will be chosen for the experiment.

This was revealed simultaneously with the acceptance by President Roosevelt of the resignation of Samuel Ordway, jr., Republican member of the Civil Service Commission.

The President, in commending Ordway for his zeal and industry as a commission member, offered him an appointment as a member of the Council of Personnel Administration.

Ordway, it is understood, will accept the offer and serve in a consultative capacity.

'England's Chestnuts'

By International News Service.

Moscow, May 31.—Soviet Russia tonight coupled an ominous warning against future Japanese aggression in the Far East with a staggering blow at Anglo-French efforts to bring Moscow into a united front against Nazi-Fascist "expansion" in Europe.

The hammer of Soviet diplomacy was wielded in strong, realistic fashion by Vyacheslav Molotoff, premier and commissar of foreign affairs, in a speech before the supreme Soviet (parliament).

Details of Soviet Policy

Molotoff, youthful-looking and vigorous, spoke for more than an hour and in unequivocal language unveiled "the mystery" of the Kremlin's attitude in the following four points:

The Soviet Union refuses immediately to accept Britain's present proposals for an Anglo-French-Soviet common "peace Front" on the ground that such an agreement in its present form may easily be rendered ineffective. Negotiations, however, are continuing.

He warned Japan the U. S. S. R. will defend the frontiers of outer Mongolia, scene of recent bloody clashes, "just as if they were our own."

Molotoff openly admitted Russia is aiding China in her war against Japan as part of Josef Stalin's pledge to help victims of aggression.

He indicated Soviet Russia may soon seek actively friendly relations with Italy and Germany, at least on a trade basis, unless the proposed Anglo-French-Soviet defensive pact is forged quickly.

Assails Reservations

Before a crowded house and in the presence of Stalin, Russian dictator, Molotoff launched his address with his attack on the latest British proposals to bring Russia into agreement against Nazi-Fascist aggression.

"The Anglo-French proposals," he declared, "contain several reservations which may render any agreement ineffective.

"It is impossible to say now whether they (Britain and France) seriously wish to end aggression or

X-Ray Reveals $100,000 of Opium In Oil at Norfolk

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury announced the seizure of $100,000 worth of opium at Norfolk yesterday.

Treasury agents said they discovered the opium hidden in vats of peanut oil by use of a fluoroscope.

The agents also said they arrested the president of the Chinese Merchants Association of Norfolk, whom they identified as Wong Ping, proprietor of an inn and head of one of the local tongs.

Use of the fluoroscope, employing X-ray, was said to be the first successful application of the process for customs purposes.

Prior House Vote Sought On Neutrality

Senate Committee Again Postpones Action on Amendments

As the Senate Foreign Relations Committee again postponed action on neutrality act amendments, House leaders apparently with Administration consent, yesterday determined to press for a prior House vote on a measure embracing State Department recommendations.

This strategy was discussed at a White House conference of leaders, it was learned. Meanwhile, Representative Bloom (Democrat), of New York, acting chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, called an executive meeting of his group this morning and predicted a "favorable report in the next three or four days."

Decision to move first in the House in an effort to remove the neutrality act barrier to adjournment, followed mandatory neutrality bloc threats of a filibuster in the Senate, and action of the Senate committee postponing further neutrality consideration until June 14.

"Suggestions" Sent Hull

The Senate group also "suggested" to Secretary of State Hull that he draft his neutrality act recommendations in bill form and submit them to the committee.

Hull last week-end recommended repeal of the present law's mandatory embargo on arms shipments to any belligerents in wartime, and new provisions empowering the President to regulate war-time shipping.

Chairman Pittman said the committee at its June 14 session will determine the date for voting on various neutrality act amendments pending before the committee.

The "suggestions," which Pittman made clear was not in the form of a "request," that Hull submit his recommendations in bill form, is understood to have been first proposed by Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and approved by the committee.

Borah Criticizes Proposals

Borah meantime criticized the Hull proposals as designed to aid other nations in wartime.

"If we pass this bill," said Borah, "we will not be doing it to help ourselves, but we will be doing it for the benefit of some other nations. I am unalterably opposed to selling manufactured war materials to belligerent nations. Let them do it—I'll never vote for it as long as I live."

Basis of House Foreign Affairs Committee discussions today will be a bill introduced by Acting Chairman Bloom, embracing the Hull proposals.

Blooms Feels Confident

Bloom, who Tuesday night conferred with committee Democrats at his home, said no vote is expected today but declared:

"I feel confident the committee will report a similar bill in the next three or four days."

He said he thought a representative number of House members agreed that the arms embargo "will do more than anything else to get us into another war."

A Senate proposal that Congress be required to approve any combat zones established in wartime by the President, under the Hull recommendations, was put forward by Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia. George said he would insist such zones be established only with Congressional approval.

Chairman Pittman disagreed on the wisdom of such a Congressional check, declaring it "totally impracticable."

Treasury Overestimates Year's Deficit

Actual Figure May Be Quarter Billion Under Forecast

The Treasury probably will find at the close of the fiscal year June 30 that for once its estimate of the total deficit was $250,000,000 or more too high.

A comparison of Government revenues and expenditures to date reveals that, due mainly to greater tax collections and to some extent to the economy drive against relief outlays, the net deficit may be nearer $3,725,000,000 than the $3,972,000,000 estimated in President Roosevelt's January budget measure.

Meanwhile, despite economy sentiment in Congress, appropriations voted at the present session indicate expenditures for the coming fiscal year, outside of relief outlays, of about $1,000,000,000 more than the total for the current fiscal year.

Tax Collections Rise

The one definite development in the picture for the current fiscal year is that tax collections will be more than was anticipated—possibly $200,000,000 greater. Most of this—$125,000,000 or more—will be income taxes.

Income tax collections for the fiscal year were estimated at $2,086,000,000 in the budget message. The Treasury has already collected $1,824,000,000, and should gather in about $400,000,000 in the June income tax installment quarter, making a total of more than $2,200,000,000. Collections in March, the big installment month, aggregated $505,000,000, or $85,000,000 more than the Treasury's private $440,000,000 estimate.

The explanation is that business, in the last half of 1938, was a little better than Treasury experts had estimated.

"Nuisance" and social security taxes are running above expectations.

Expenditures Uncertain

The result is that Government revenues ought to exceed $5,700,000,000 instead of the $5,520,000,000 estimated in January.

On the expenditure side there is much less certainty. Some heavy construction phases of the Administration's spending-lending recovery drive are said to be lagging, but it appears that vouchers carrying Public Works Administration grants certainly will not be behind the January estimates.

The Government, up to May 27, had spent $8,242,279,213. The budget message calls for total expenditures for the fiscal year of $9,492,329,000—leaving a margin of $1,250,000,000.

Large as this figure may seem, it is possible that expenditures in the next 30 days may be close to it.

So far as spending authorizations for the coming fiscal year are concerned, Congress has been going to town.

Poage Would Balance Child Exiles, Quota

Admission to U. S. Proposed Under Quota Restrictions

Representative Poage (Democrat), of Texas, yesterday proposed in the House an amendment to the Wagner-Rogers bill, permitting admission of 20,000 German refugee children in the next two years, but requiring future deductions from the German immigration quota as the children reach the age of 21 years.

The proposal was regarded as a compromise likely to increase chances of the bill's passage.

John Thomas Taylor, legislative representative of the American Legion, told the House Immigration Committee that the proposed legislation was "an effort to break down existing immigration laws."

On behalf of the former servicemen's organization, he opposed any relaxation of existing barriers, "no matter how sympathetic we may be to the children who would be benefited."

F. W. Buck, who said he represented the "Defenders of the Constitution," told the committee he feared admission of the children would create "more opposition" in this country to Jews, "and we don't want to do that, because they're nice people."

Chairman Dickstein (Democrat), New York, protested that Catholic and Protestant children, as well as Jewish, would be affected by the bill.

Buck said he and his associates had interviewed 86 men and 12 women in Maryland about the proposal and all except one of the women expressed opposition.

Utility Purchase By TVA May Fail

New York, May 31 (AP).—Conferences in the TVA area in the next few days may determine the fate of the $80,000,000 TVA-Commonwealth & Southern agreement, important public utility sources said today.

The agreement, transferring C. & S.'s Tennessee electric producing and distributing facilities to TVA and associated municipalities, expires the end of June.

Unless it is renewed, or unless Congress by that time authorizes TVA to issue bonds of $45,000,000 needed to finance the deal, utility men said it may not go through.

Adjournment July 15 Is Goal Of Democrats

Tax Revision, Neutrality, Rail, Relief, Social Security Listed as 'Must'

By Cecil B. Dickson.
International News Service Writer

Adjournment of Congress on July 15 was the goal set yesterday by Democratic leaders at a conference with President Roosevelt at the White House on the legislative program.

A five-point program of "essential" measures was agreed upon, Speaker Bankhead and House Majority Leader Sam Rayburn announced. They are:

Tax revision to aid business.

A $1,750,000,000 relief bill.

Railroad rehabilitation measures.

Social security act revision, to eliminate pay roll tax increases and to speed up old age pension payments.

Proposed changes in the Wagner labor relations act and the wage-hour law were omitted from the list, but the leaders indicated the door was still open for action on them, provided committees in charge reported bills that could be enacted without difficulty.

Hatch Bill Passage Seen

Vice President Garner, meantime, predicted the Senate-approved Hatch bill, now pigeonholed in a House judiciary sub-committee, "will be law when we quit." The Hatch bill is designed to eliminate politics from relief.

Plans to permit President Roosevelt's two Government reorganization orders to take effect July 1 were speeded yesterday when the House Reorganization Committee reported the Senate approved Byrnes' resolution. House action is slated on it Friday.

Chairman Lea (Democrat), of California, announced the House Interstate Commerce Committee would have ready for early House action the keystone measure of the three railroad bills already passed by the Senate.

Only the Administration bill extending President Roosevelt's extraordinary monetary powers, now bottled up in the Senate Banking Committee, is really worrying Administration chieftains. Unless action is forthcoming within the next 30 days, the $2,000,000,000 currency stabilization fund, silver purchasing plan, and dollar devaluation authority will expire.

A $305,000,000 armament appropriation bill, now being framed in the House, also awaits action to round out the Administration's national defense program.

Many Bills to Be Scuttled

Scores of bills calling for outlays of billions of dollars and far-reaching reforms will be scuttled if the list of measures to be considered is limited to those enumerated by Bankhead and Rayburn.

Among the apparently doomed proposals as those for a national health program, Federal aid to education, extension of slum clearance, reorganization of the communications commission, construction of transcontinental super-highways, flood control and rivers and harbors work and others.

The drive for mid-July adjournment was launched shortly after Mr. Roosevelt returned from a four-day rest at his Hyde Park home. The President met early with his congressional leaders, including Vice President Garner and Senate Majority Leader Barkley, and urged them to let him know next Monday whether Congress could be ready to quit by July 15.

They promised to let him know definitely in order that he might make plans for a transcontinental trip this summer.

On Capitol Hill

Thomas G. Corcoran, a top-ranking "brain truster" in the Roosevelt Administration was tendered a luncheon in the office of the secretary of the Senate yesterday.

CORCORAN

Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who served as host, told reporters "it was a purely social gathering." No legislation, pending or being incubated, was discussed at the luncheon, according to Ashurst and others in the party.

After the group had assembled in the office of Col. Edwin A. Halsey, Senate secretary, Ashurst escorted Corcoran into the room, arm in arm.

Among those present were Senators Schwellenbach, Washington; Barkley, Kentucky; Harrison, Mississippi; Pittman, Nevada; Byrnes, South Carolina; Neely, West Virginia, and Guffey, Pennsylvania.

Ending more than 30 years of controversy between Colorado, New Mexico and Texas over equitable use of the waters of the Rio Grande, President Roosevelt yesterday signed an act by Congress approving a tri-State pact involving use of the waters by the three States.

The Senate was asked by its Interstate Commerce Committee to authorize a thorough investigation of the Nation's telegraph industry.

The committee unanimously adopted a resolution calling for the investigation, to be completed and reported back to Congress by January 5, 1940.

Introduced by Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, the resolution called for the committee to make an investigation covering economic conditions of the major telegraph companies; their relations to corporations engaged in other forms of communications; tendencies toward "consolidation and monopoly" in the industry.

The committee inquiry will be directed primarily, it was understood, to ascertain the advisability or feasibility of the long-rumored merger of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies.

A flag-covered statue of the late Will Rogers, Oklahoma cowboy-humorist, was uncrated yesterday and moved into the Capitol rotunda between statues of Hamilton and Washington.

The statue will be unveiled June 6 by Rogers' widow and Jo Davidson, of Paris, the sculptor. Later it will be moved into statuary hall.

Carrying out a recommendation of the Maritime Commission, Chairman Bland (Democrat), of Virginia, of the House Merchant Marine Committee, introduced a bill to authorize the commission to write marine war risk insurance and other marine insurance.

Bland's bill would set up a revolving fund out of which the insurance losses would be paid. The insurance would cover American shipping and would include vessels, cargoes, personal effects of officers and ship crews, and provide for payment to officers and crew members for death or injury. It would be written only when the commission deemed the normal channels of insurance inadequate to meet marine needs.

Law on Labor Is Debated at Georgetown U.

O'Mahoney, Chavez, Richardson Take Part in Symposium

The Government, corporations and labor unions were praised and buffeted by prominent speakers when the Georgetown University Law School yesterday took over for a day celebration of the university's founding by John Carroll 150 years ago.

Last night lawyers discussed the development of government and law during the 150 years. In the afternoon speakers were invited to speak from both sides of controversial subjects.

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, chairman of the Congressional committee investigating monopolies, told the afternoon forum: "Here and abroad, big government is a direct result of the growth of big business."

Richardson Speaks

Seth W. Richardson, Washington lawyer, formerly an assistant of the Attorney General, declared that business in the United States had been restricted too much because of the encroachments of Federal bureaucratic control.

Lee Pressman, general counsel for the C. I. O., declared: "Organized labor realizes that upon its shoulders rests much of the burden of defending our democracy and civil rights from those who would saddle upon our people a totalitarian system designed to rob us all of our civil rights, our freedom of thought and action."

C. Nelson Sparks, of Akron, Ohio, organizer of a "law and order league" after the sit-down strikes in that city, declared "Current union labor leadership and government, throughout the past four years of unprecedented labor disturbances attendant with rioting, civil commotion and a wholesale violation of most of our laws, have completely disregarded and ignored the general public's rights and interests in the 'future of America.'"

Senator Chavez Talks

Senator Dennis Chavez (Democrat), New Mexico, stated, after describing economic disturbances caused by strikes and labor disputes:

"There must be an assurance to the general public that safeguards will be afforded them from unruly activities and guard orderly society and economic civilization." Referring to the rights of labor and employers, he added: "By legalizing collective bargaining, by prohibiting the abuse in the granting of unjust injunctions, by preventing discrimination against individuals because of labor activity, by clothing picketing with the constitutional guarantees of free speech, we have deliberately sought to equalize a former disparity existing between the two disputants."

William F. Kelly, Washington attorney, stated: "Industry must continue solvent and competitive if it is to survive, and while at the moment labor has been given legal advantages without the corresponding legal obligations, nevertheless it will be found that, as in the past, the American people will see the necessity of correcting these conditions and present laws will be changed where necessary to bring about stability.

"Jobs for workers and improved working conditions cannot be realized unless labor joins in keeping business solvent and competitive," he continued, "and all parties to negotiations in labor disputes should recognize this."

Last night's meeting was also a symposium in which the following participated: Dr. James Brown Scott, honorary president of the American Society of International Law; Frank J. Hogan, president of the American Bar Association, and Chief Justice Edmund W. Flynn, of Rhode Island. The Rev. Francis E. Lucey, regent of the law school, presided. At the afternoon forums on labor and monopolies, Prof. Walter H. E. Jaeger, professor of labor law, and Al Philip Kane, professor of corporate reorganization, presided.

Today's celebration will be under the auspices of the school of medicine. At night more than 1,000 are expected to attend a sesquicentennial ball at the Willard Hotel. A committee met yesterday at the Mayflower to plan for the alumni banquet at that hotel Saturday. William E. Leahy will be toastmaster, and Frank J. Hogan, principal speaker at the alumni banquet.

Esther Barrow at Organ

Music was by the Washington String Quartet and Esther Jones Barrow, organist. The prayer was delivered by Dr. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, of All Soul's Unitarian Church.

Dean Gildersleeve said preservation of the Constitution will assure "liberty under law, equality of opportunity for all our men and women and the true spirit of comradeship for all."

"We must definitely turn our back on the doctrine of hatred that is being thrown at us from the left and from the right and continue to exalt the three-fold spirit of our Constitution, which is just as surely the symbol of our Nation as a king is the symbol of England and its empire," she said.

NLRB Accused Of 'Playing Up to Thugs' in Oregon

By the Associated Press.

Former Gov. Charles H. Martin of Oregon asserted yesterday that the National Labor Board had "played up to thugs" in Oregon labor disputes and thereby "made a bad situation worse."

Testifying at Senate Labor Committee hearings on proposed amendments to the Wagner labor act, Martin recited various instances of violence which he said occurred as a result of A. F. of L. and C. I. O. rivalry for dominance in the Oregon lumber industry. Seventy-six individuals, he said, were sent to prison for conspiracy or violence. He said rivalry between the two labor organizations "was built up and aggravated by the way the board acted in taking sides with the C. I. O."

Charles Fahy, the board's general counsel, contended meanwhile before the House Labor Committee that many pending amendments to the Wagner labor act were intended to impair enforcement of the law.

Offer to Settle Park Bank Case Denied

Approved Settlement Would Expedite Payment to Depositors

Without denying that negotiations are under way, the office of the Comptroller of the Currency yesterday told The Post that neither it nor Receiver John F. Moran has received an offer from directors of the defunct Park Savings Bank for settlement of their obligations out of court.

"No offer of settlement is under consideration because none has been made," said an official spokesman. "The news stories published today which stated the opposite were premature and withotu authority."

However, it was indicated that a financial proposition may be made soon when the Comptroller's office official said that "if no offer is forthcoming, the receiver will proceed with the suit."

An approved settlement in the controversial case, which has been in the courts virtually ever since the bank closed in 1933, would expedite the payment of dividends to depositors and have the effect of quashing two suits now pending against the directors.

It is reported that the directors are prepared to settle for $400,000, but this figure is said to be unacceptable.

Joseph T. Sherier, chief of counsel for the director group, and other non-Government spokesmen for the defunct bank's controllers, declined to discuss the negotiations.

The courts have held that the directors are liable for deposits in the bank as of August 30, 1929, when the institution's charter expired.

The Park Savings Bank made a 5 per cent "distribution payment" in 1933 and a 20 per cent dividend in 1934.

Old-Age Pension Increase Sought

increase social security act payments when the amendments reach the floor.

Estimates of the final ballot in favor of the Townsend bill meanwhile ranged from 100 to upwards of 150 votes, with some leaders maintaining it had lost strength in yesterday's running debate.

In two quick votes, the House speedily agreed, 217 to 63 and 221 to 53 to a tight rule banning all amendments to the new $50-a-month measure sponsored by Dr. Francis E. Townsend.

Calling on the House to crush the measure, Representative Doughton declared it would "tax 120,000,000 people out of existence in order to give a joy ride to 10,000,000 old people."

"Unjust and Faniastic"

Terming the plan "unjust and fantastic," he said it imposed "the heaviest taxes ever levied in this or any other country."

Representative Hendricks (Democrat), of Florida, author of the revised Townsend bill, defended the plan as "essentially a national recovery measure" based on the philosophy of "spending to bring back recovery." Hendricks himself concedes defeat of his measure.

Most bitter Republican attack was launched by Representative Short, of Missouri, who had Townsend support in the last campaign. Short said the plan was "conceived in ignorance, born in obscurity and destined for oblivion." Short called it "a nauseating and indigestible measure" that would levy taxes from the cradle to the grave and "from the time you jump out of bed in the morning to use your toothpaste until you climb into your cotton pajamas at night."

Representative Shafer (Republican), of Wisconsin, assailed Dr. Townsend as a "two-time demagogue, a faker and a racketeer."

Among Republicans defending the plan were Representative Mott, of Oregon, who declared "you cannot ridicule this bill out of existence," and Representative Lemke, of North Dakota, who urged it as a "share the wealth" measure.

Representative Brewster (Republican), of Maine, made no outright commitment, but said he approved "pay-as-you-go" features, and declared the social security act is "financially ruining the country." Representative Smith, another Maine Townsendite, merely asked permission to print remarks in the record.

Committee Criticized

The Ways and Means Committee, which reported the plan "without recommendation," and the Rules Committee, which barred modifying amendments with a so-called "gag" rule, came in for a running fire of criticism from Republicans, who accused leaders of deliberately putting members "on the spot."

Short declared that if the combined intelligence of both committees was poured into a crucible, "you would almost have a half-wit."

But when Representative Massingale (Democrat), of Oklahoma, called Ways and Means Committee action "pusillanimous," Representative Hoffman (Republican), of Michigan, objected, and asked that the words "be taken down." He was overruled by Speaker Bankhead, who said he saw nothing particularly objectionable.

Apologizes to Mapes

Hoffman again objected when Massingale called Representative Mapes (Republican), of Michigan, a ranking minority Rules Committee member, "a Brutus" to the Nation's old people, after an attack by Mapes on the plan. Massingale apologized to Mapes, and obtained permission to withdraw his remarks.

At another point, Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of New York, raised a "parliamentary" inquiry on eligibility of House members over 60 to vote on the plan. Kennedy said there were 134 House members over 60 who could qualify for the Townsend pensions.

Firemen Work Hour to Rescue Boy From Cave-in Top—Crowd watched anxiously as firemen worked more than an hour yesterday to free 10-year-old Charles Nester from a 17-foot sewer excavation on Third street northwest. ing planks with heavy saws, brought young Nestor out in an unconscious condition. There were conflicting stories on what occurred.

Witness Terrified

Richard Janigian, 9, of 487 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, said that he ran across the ditch top with Charles when "he fell into the hole." The hole he referred to was a large, round gap in the piled earth at the top of the 17-foot ditch being dug to rearrange pipe lines in the leveling off of Third street between Constitution avenue and C streets northwest.

Then Richard became terrified in the telling and could say nothing else.

However, officials at the Washington Boys Club, which faces the excavation, said that after the boy had fallen in the hole he screamed for help and a watchman came and attempted to pull him from the hole on a rope. This, they said, caused more dirt to fall and the watchman summoned a group of workmen from nearby. Their efforts to release the boy were unavailing. Some unidentified person called the firemen.

By the time that Patrolman W. A. Elliott, of No. 1 Precinct arrived, dozens of persons were lining the rail above the excavation, calling encouragement to the boy and telling him not to cry. His moans could be heard.

Timbers Cut Away

The firemen weren't 20 minutes in getting Charles out. Even after they arrived his cries were fainlty heard, but those stopped after a while and the firemen kept cutting away at the timbers that shored up the sides of the excavation, behind which the boy was huddled out of sight of the rescuers.

After they had cut through the boards, it was necessary to shovel away loads of dirt before they could lay their hands on him. Dragging the boy out of the hole they had cut, the firemen raised him to the top, where a physician probed dirt from his nose. His entire body was covered with the brown, muddy dirt.

Charles' father is manager of the New Franklin Hotel, 606 Pennsylvania avenue northwest. He said that he had urged Charles against going from home yesterday afternoon, but Charles said he wanted to go to the Boys Club.

Hospital physicians last night said that Charles was cut and bruised by his fall and would be kept at the hospital for further examination. His injuries did not appear to be serious.

Won't Resign, Says Randolph

however, told him he knew nothing of their activities in the milk probe.

Speaker Bankhead at a press conference, in response to a question, said he had been informed that a dictograph had been installed in a House Office Building. The information, he said, was given him by Romney. If the report were true, he said, the Metropolitan Police and the sub-committee were acting without jurisdiction or authority.

Representative Bates subsequently talked with the Speaker, "to put him straight," he explained.

From another source it was learned that Capitol police had discovered an insulated wire in Room 537 of the old House Office Building and assumed it was a dictograph wire. The wire was a telephone line.

Information upon which lobbying activities of Whiting Faulkner, Martinsburg, W. Va., postmaster, and others were uncovered, it was learned, was obtained by means of dictograph records in downtown hotels rather than on Capitol Hill.

"I know that dictagraph records were used in the House Office Building," Romney repeated doggedly last night in the face of Bates' denial.

Asked what he intended to do about it, he intimated that many things might happen but concluded that he at least would write a stern letter of reproof to Maj. Brown.

Further violent repercussions to the latest developments in the milk investigation are expected when the District Committee meets this morning. No action on the Schulte milk bill is anticipated, however, as Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, is out of the city.

The Bates sub-committee held a brief and humdrum hearing yesterday morning, but none of the investigators, except the chairman, was present. It adjourned at noon until today with its future program in doubt.

Charles W. Holman, secretary of the National Milk Producers Federation, criticized the United States Public Health Service milk code as "devised for primitive communities" and "the lowest acceptable standard."

Under cross-examination by Sefton Darr, attorney for the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy, he admitted that the code is in effect in Chicago, Louisville and other cities.

Universal adoption of the code, he said, would benefit only two groups: (1) the large dairy corporations, which would be able to beat down the price to producers, and (2) the chiselers in the distributing business.

Under questioning by Darr he expressed the belief that the per capita income of Washingtonians enters into the District retail milk price. He expressed the belief that "wealth should be one of the factors" considered in establishing a milk price.

Holman said it would be a mistake to open up the Washington milkshed to Western cream or milk. The Western producers would not benefit materially, he said, and local dairy farmers would suffer severe losses on their investments.

C. J. Babcock, of the dairy marketing division of the Department of Agriculture, submitted reports of tests made of milk picked up in various sections of the District. These reports showed that the bacteria count ranged from 1,000,000 to 200 per cubic centimeter. Only one dairy had the high count.

The bacteria count was higher in milk taken from stores, he said, than in that taken off dairy trucks which make home deliveries.

Meanwhile, further confusion was added to the asphalt paving negotiations in which Representative Randolph figured as John F. Somerville, of Martinsburg, W. Va., who attended the two conferences, stated that he had no interest in the proposal to limit the market to "lake" asphalt.

Somerville, who previously had been identified by Randolph as one of his constituents in the matter, told a Post correspondent that he was only the guest of John Warden, of Philadelphia, a representative of the Barber Asphalt Corporation, of Barber, N. J.

"My concern, the Interstate Amiesite Co., did not enter into the conference," he said. "The chief topic of discussion was asphalt, which we do not carry. Any change that might have been made would not have benefited us."

Faulkner told The Post correspondent that he had not been asked to resign his postmastership because of his alleged lobbying activities in connection with the District probe.

"Furthermore," he added, "I do not anticipate such a request."

He reiterated denials that he had promise dto deliver the vote of Chairman Randolph or obtain advance information from the sub-committee.

"Captain Horatio Hornblower," by C. S. Forester, is as grand a story as has been presented to lovers of the sea and ships in many a day. In reality, it is a trilogy of two earlier titles—"Beat to Quarters" and "Ship of the Line"—combined with a third and new one, "Flying Colors." In all three books, Captain Horatio Hornblower, an officer in England's navy, guides the ship under his command through gruelling battles to hard-won victory. This saga of the sailing ship era presents a man who is a hero to his crews, a genius to his officers, and a fascinating personality to the reader $2.75

World Cotton Control Parley Called by U. S.

Exporting Nations Invited to Meeting Here September 5

By the Associated Press.

Proposing a broad, long-term attack on the problem of surplus cotton, the United States yesterday called an international conference of cotton-exporting countries to discuss the possibility of world-wide control of production and marketing.

The conference will be held here beginning September 5. Acting on behalf of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, the State Department invited Argentina, Brazil, Egypt, India, Mexico, Peru, the Sudan, Soviet Russia, France and Great Britain, the latter two for their cotton-exporting colonies.

The formal call came only a few days after Wallace had disclosed that these countries had replied favorably to American inquiries regarding such a meeting.

Agriculture Department officials emphasized that the conference would be of an "exploratory" character only. Its only function would be to determine whether it might be advisable to recommend to the respective countries that a later conference be called to draft an international agreement.

Such an agreement, if written along lines suggested by President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace, would provide export quotas assuring each country its "fair share" of world markets and production control measures designed to prevent accumulation of price-depressing surpluses.

A somewhat similar exploratory conference on world wheat problems has been meeting in London this spring. This meeting is expected, American officials said, to recommend that a formal conference be called to draft an international agreement authorizing export quotas and providing for elimination of such price-cutting practices as payment of bounties on exports.

Officials have estimated that when this year's cotton crop starts moving to market, there will be a surplus of about 14,000,000 bales of old American cotton alone. Normal annual domestic and export requirements take about 12,500,000 bales. Nearly 11,400,000 bales of the American surplus is stored as collateral for Government loans to growers.

The Films Finally Give 'First-Nighters' Break

New Screen Plays in Majority Next Week; A New Theater Project Planned for Northwest; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

UPON REFERENCE to the midweek notices on the next page, you will observe that for the first time in several weeks new films will outnumber the holdover and repeat engagements for the week beginning today in two theaters and tomorrow in the rest.

These new films hold to a pretty high level of excellence. We already have had much to say concerning "Rose of Washington Square," which opens today on the screen at Loew's Palace. We also have expended a few words on the many virtues of "Only Angels Have Wings," which comes to the Earle screen tomorrow. "The Return of the Cisco Kid," tomorrow's opener at the Capitol, and "The Mikado," at RKO-Keith's, we have not as yet been privileged to view. Remembering Warner Baxter as the original Cisco Kid and, like everybody else, knowing "The Mikado" backwards, it is difficult to see how either of them could go wrong.

BELL

Particular interest should center in "The Mikado," since it has Kenny Baker's splendid voice in the role of Nanki-Poo and the D'Oyly Carters in support and is executed entirely in Technicolor. This famous old Savoyard operetta should make a perfect Technicolor subject. Its songs and plot, of course, will be as familiar as an old shoe. But on the evidence of the recent engagement of the D'Oyly Carte Co., at the National, that should make no difference. They presented "The Mikado" at both Saturday matinee and night performances and sold out both. The picturized "Mikado," with elaborated scenes and color, should prove even more attractive.

But the point is that Washington's cinema "first-nighters" will have a crack at five new films this week, instead of a paltry two. The fifth is "The Gorilla," starring the Ritz Brothers, at Loew's Columbia. I wouldn't know anything about that one as yet, either—except what my imagination tells me.

Tom Keene, famous "Western" star of the films will be in Washington on Sunday and Monday to make personal appearances at the Atlas Theater, out Northeast way. Mr. Keene, so one is told, will have his horse with him and, in addition to his appearances at the theater, will indulge in a few other spectacular stunts designed to catch the interest of the newshounds as well as members of the Senate and House of Representatives. This last is by no means a surety, but it might be well to keep your eye peeled.

The radio broadcast from the Springfield, Ill., premiere of Twentieth Century-Fox' production of "Young Mr. Lincoln," starring Henry Fonda, Tuesday night, took on all the aspects of a carnival of enthusiasm on the part of both participating artists and audience. Lowell Thomas, Twentieth Century's official mouthpiece, seemingly both on the screen and off, talked a little bit too much, it seemed to me, and persisted in referring to the occasion as a "permeer," but aside from that everything was very ne plus ultra.

For some inexplicable reason, Marian Anderson, who opened the broadcast with the singing of two stanzas of "America," chose to render that anthem in a high soprano register which caused her to sound as little as possible like Marian Anderson. In her later numbers, "Ave Maria" and a group of spirituals, she came down to her normal range and elicited thunders of applause.

Some of the brief speeches made by the visiting Hollywood stars were a bit surprising in both their pith and poise—especially Alice Brady's, Arleen Whelan's and Eddie Collins'. Binnie Barnes and Cesar Romero, who had no part in the picture and probably were just along for the ride, were graceful in their remarks, but not quite so completely in the spirit of the Lincoln picture and environment as the others who had been close to both for a long period.

The thunderous applause that came through the loudspeaker seemed to indicate an audience of huge proportions. I am given to understand that the Fox-Lincoln Theater in Springfield was occupied by only 1,000 people on the evening of Memorial Day. They must have had at least six or eight hands each!

There are two character actors appearing in current films who seem to be sneaking up on the Academy Award for the best supporting player of the year. They are: Thomas Mitchell and Sig Rumann. This Mr. Mitchell is a gentleman of parts. He can do anything in the theater, from writing plays to acting and directing them. I have yet to see him give a poor performance. But this year he is outdoing himself. He would seem to be running in front for the "best supporting player" award of the Academy on the strength of his portrayals in "Stagecoach" and "Only Angels Have Wings" alone. Either one is good enough to win it. Sig Rumann will be remembered as the actor who made his first appearance in Washington on the stage of the National Theater in support of Ethel Barrymore in one of her shorter-lived vehicles. He was a fine actor then and is a finer one now. You probably noticed that in "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" and will observe it again in "Only Angels Have Wings."

Announcement was made yesterday of completion of plans for the erection of a new motion picture theater to serve the University Park and Spring Valley residential sections of Northwest Washington by C. H. Olive, managing director of the Atlas and Princess Theaters, northeast.

The theater, as yet unnamed, will be located in the 4800 block of Massachusetts avenue and is expected to take its place as one of the foremost residential playhouses in this part of the country. It will have a seating capacity of approximately 1,600 and will embody many innovations in design and equipment.

John J. Zink, noted Baltimore theater architect, is the designer of the new project. Mr. Zink already has numerous theaters in Washington, including the Rialto, his first, the Newton and several others. It is the expectation that the new theater will be ready for formal dedication in the early fall.

This new enterprise will be operated by the Life Amusement Co., of which Fred S. Kogod is president, and will be under the general supervision of C. H. Olive, one of Washington's veteran independent showmen.

Stress already is being laid on the fact that the new house will have ample parking facilities, a vital factor these days.

The Cross Roads Theater, down at Bailey's Cross Roads will hold tryouts tonight, tomorrow and Saturday nights at 8 o'clock for parts in several of its future plays. The first three productions of the season, "Abie's Irish Rose," "Candlelight" and Biography" already have been cast and are in rehearsal. The tryouts will be for plays to be given after July 17. The Cross Roads' season will be inaugurated Monday night with "Abie's Irish Rose."

So from 9 to 9:20 last night I chatted over long-distance with Howard Hawks, director of "Only Angels Have Wings," opening at the Earle tomorrow. Mr. Hawks, in Hollywood, chatted with me from 6 to 6:20, by his wrist watch. My fellow-Hoosier is an extremely easy and interesting interviewee. He told me a great deal I think you will want to know. I'll tell you at the first opportunity.

Glancing-at-the-Thermometer Note

There goes that collar again!

Gracie Fields Stars at the Little

If you don't know Gracie Fields, you should meet her. The Little Theater is reviving her critical success of last summer, "We're Going to Be Rich," and, because of the recent anxiety over the Polish pianist, is also extending the run of Paderewski's "Moonlight Sonata."

A personality as distinctive as she is representative, Gracie Fields is Britain's best-loved comedienne. Her popularity lies with the masses in the old country and although she is not well known over here, "We're Going to Be Rich" has captured many an admirer for her. She is a lusty, vibrant figure, contrasting strangely with that other British comedienne, Beatrice Lillie, whose popularity in this country is something immense, although in her own land, the highly-touted Lady Peel is considered something of a hothouse plant.

In "We're Going to Be Rich," Gracie is a music hall entertainer of the '80's and her always overly-optimistic husband, Victor McLaglen, has invested her savings—meant for a return from Australia to England—in a questionable gold-mine deal in Johannesburg. And if you think the West of so many a recent American thriller was the only spot where women were on the other side of the curtain, you should see the South Africa of 1880. Saloon brawls, frontier toughies and gold rushes were a universal habit of those days. How Miss Fields reforms her man by reforming herself is interspersed with those character songs that have made her famous. "Waitin' at the Gate," "Tavern in the Town" and songs from her own country are dashed off by the Lancashire lass.

Brian Donlevy is a familiar figure in the cast as her protector. As the gruff Dobbie, McLaglen has one of those barrel-chested roles so uniquely his. There is a wow of a fight scene to close the film, with McLaglen giving us his idea of what the squared circle of 50 years ago considered action. One Ted Smith, a cockney youngster if ever there was one, is nephew Tim, something of a liaison officer between the singing wife and her warlike spouse.

With Paderewski in "Moonlight Sonata" is Marie Tempest and Charles Farrell in the leading roles of the rambling plot. But with Paderewski the piano is the thing and the four numbers he plays are captured with such fascinating camera detail that this, his only film, remains of musical importance.

New York, May 31.

SEC. SWANSON: When the Squalus sank, City Editor Walter Lister decided to hire Commander Ellsberg to write of the rescue work. He phoned Ellsberg, who was aboard the aircraft carrier Ranger . . . "I'm on my annual tour of active duty," Ellsberg informed. "I can't accept any private offers, unless Washington approves" . . . Lister then spent three hours trying to reach Washington officials who would use sufficient influence to arrange this. Senators, brass hats, newspapermen—all were contacted, but they could do nothing . . . Because you and your Assistant Secretary are both ill, the persistent Lister phoned Admiral William D. Leahy, who was at a dinner party. In five minutes, without any "influence," Leahy answered the phone, and said: "Swell. Tell Commander Ellsberg it's all right."

ANNE COOPER HEWITT: Your brothre, Dick Brugiere, arrived a bit late for his job as photographer at Fefe's Monte Carlo. Jerome Zerbe, of the rival El Morocco, was at the Monte Carlo then, and agreed to substitute. Zerbe took a number of photos in this rival cafe—and, because he was using a strange camera, all the pictures were out of focus.

CARL LAEMMLE: Your son, Junior Laemmle, certainly likes the horses . . . He attended the wedding of Phyllis Welch, the screen actress, to Graham MacDonald. The wedding was scheduled for 4:15, at the Little Church Around the Corner . . . Junior telephoned the bride, shortly before the ceremony, and asked if she could postpone it until 6—so that he wouldn't miss the last race at Belmont!

GEORGE ABBOTT, who is Broadway's foremost rumba addict, will have a rumba jam session in his next production . . . Willie and Eugene Howard will leave for Hollywood for a two-week engagement at Earl Carroll's Club—where they'll try out their new sketches for the Scandals . . . Jack Dempsey is considering dropping one of his enterprises.

JEALOUS DETRACTORS insist that the monkeys used in Frank Buck's "Bring 'Em Back Alive" exhibit were purchased on Fulton street . . . De Pinna, the 5th Ave. store, reopened from 7 to 9:30 p. m. with every department fully staffed, just to oblige one customer—Billy Rose.

EPHRAIM LONDON, the attorney, asked Justice McGeehan for an adjournment of a case. He explained that he will be married June 8, and then will honeymoon . . . "How long an adjournment will that be," asked the jurist, "until your honeymoon money runs out?" . . . The bridegroom's financial condition is quite satisfactory, but if his money ever should run out there's a reserve fund. For the Mrs. London-to-be just won the World's Fair $1,000 poem prize.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 31.—Good morning! Yes, I am glad to be back, but I did have a grand rest and vacation in Guaymas, Hexico, where no one works and everyone enjoys being idle. On my return, I was interested to hear that seven members of our film industry are to have awards given them by the University of Southern California tomorrow night.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Professor Von Kleinsmid, acting for the cinematography division, will award the prizes to Nelson Eddy for his work in "Sweethearts," Jack Warner for his patriotic efforts, Norma Shearer for "Marie Antoinette," Gabriel Pascal for "Pygmalion," Sam Woods for "Goodbye Mr. Chips," John Considine for "Boys Town" and May Robson for her 70 years in the theater. The cinematography class is doing really worth-while work and many of our film folk lecture there during the year.

My favorite Russian, Gregory Ratoff, is all excitement. He has been borrowed from Twentieth Century-Fox to direct "Intermezzo" at the Selznick Studio and it is a picture he likes. If you knew Greg, you'd get a kick out of hearing him tell about the 3,000 classical phonograph records he owns. Catch on? "Intermezzo" is about a famous violinist. Gregory finishes "Hotel for Women" Saturday and moves over t othe Selznick Studios Monday, which won't give him much time to rest. William Wyler says there was no trouble when he stepped out of "Intermezzo"—merely that he is booked at the Goldwyn Studios in July and he wouldn't have time to finish with Leslie Howard, Edna Best and Ingrid Bergman.

Greta Garbo started work Monday, donning make-up for the first time in two years and wearing modern clothes for the first time in six years. She wore a blue tailored suit in the scene in which she appeared and she seemed generally glad to be back at work. She told a very amusing story on herself. She and Mercedes de Acosta went to a corner drugstore, with Greta wearing one of the big hats that she affects. The kid behind the counter, not recognizing the great Garbo, wisecracked, "Say sister, that hat looks like the haymaker's daughter!" Believe it or not, Garbo thought it a funny yarn.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: I'll be greatly surprised if Cary Grant and Phyllis Brooks don't marry when he joins her abroad. He is so lonesome for Brooksie that he is leaving for England very soon; Dorothy Lamour and Randy Scott are becoming a habit; George Raft's makeup gift to Virginia Peine is a gorgeous new pin of diamond, pearls and rubies. His nag, Nadir, won the eighth race at the opening of Hollywood Park and made George and a few of his pals much richer; Ria Gable has gone to Texas on her annual jaunt to visit her daughter. What, in the midst of the racing season, too? Joseph Schenck leaves for New York next and will be guest of honor Saturday at a barbecue given him by the Jay Paleys; Dorothy Lamour is bidding her friends to a cocktail party Sunday; Miriam Hopkins and Anatole Litvak are hosting a dinner tomorrow night. Oh! Just lots of parties!

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

'Mikado' and 'Rose' Open This Morning; Other Amusements

"THE MIKADO." At last, the Gilbert and Sullivan worshipers receive their long-prayed-for film version of "The Mikado." With members of the D'Oyly Carte Opera Company in the leading roles, which they have portrayed here, and with Radio Singer Kenny Baker as the wandering Nanki-Poo, this version of the incomparable Savoy opera was filmed in London with the London Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Geoffrey Toye. Sydney Granville, Martyn Green, Jean Colin, John Barclay and Constance Willis have other leading roles. Opens this morning at RKO-Keith's Theater.

Palace

"ROSE OF WASHINGTON SQUARE." Tyrone Power, Alice Faye and Al Jolson have the leading roles in this story of the rushing twenties and the prohibition era. Jolson portrays a successful "mammy" singer, Alice is a "blues" songstress and Power is a young man who lives by his wits. Directed by Gregory Ratoff, it is based on an original story by John Larkin and Jerry Horwin. William Frawley, Joyce Compton and Hobart Cavanaugh are featured; Miss Faye sings "My Man" and "Rose of Washington Square" and Jolson revives some of the hits he made popular. Opens this morning.

Earle

"ONLY ANGELS HAVE WINGS." Cary Grant and Jean Arthur are costarred in this drama of an air-line operator in a small South American seaport, determined to win a mail contract that depends on six months' continuous flights. Richard Barthelmess returns to the screen in this film and Thomas Mitchell, Rita Hayworth, Sig Ruman, Victor Killian, John Carroll and Allyn Joslyn are others in Howard Hawks' cast. On the stage, "Command Performance" will feature as its highlight, the Roxyettes in "The Changing of the Guard." The Pickerts, recently of "Babes in Arms," will present "Dance Diversions;" Hector and His Pals and the Virginians also are on the bill and Bert Granoff remains to sing another week. Opens tomorrow.

Capitol

"THE RETURN OF THE CISCO KID." O. Henry's popular character of the old West is again played by Warner Baxter. Robbing banks, burning jails and loving the one girl in all Mexico that he shouldn't, the outlaw is involved in many a border adventure. Cesar Romero, Henry Hull, Lynn Bari, Kane Richmond, C. Henry Gordon and Robert Barrat join Baxter in his return to the characterization of the Cisco Kid. "World's Fair Flashes," is on the Capitol stage, with its own Trylon and Perisphere and a French fashion show, as well. Frank Gaby headlines the bill with his "Gift o' Gab." The Gaudsmith Brothers with their French poodles in a tumbling act, Alphonse Berg and Jimmy and Mildred Mulcay are others on the stage. Opens tomorrow.

Metropolitan

"MAN OF CONQUEST." Sam Houston comes to life in the person of Richard Dix in Republic Picture's most ambitious production to date, which recently played a week at the Earle. Houston's life with the Cherokee Indians, his comradship with Andrew Jackson in the War of 1812 and his history-making adventures in Texas span the years which created this early American hero. Gail Patrick, Joan Fontaine, Edward Ellis, C. Henry Gordon, Robert Armstrong, Victor Jory and Ralph Morgan are having important roles in the cast of hundreds. Open tomorrow.

Columbia

"THE GORILLA." The Ritz Brothers have taken over another of the old standbys and they are aided in their hilarity by Patsy Kelly, Lionel Atwill, Bela Lugosi and Joseph Calleia are there to make things spooky and Anita Louise and Edward Norris are a pair of more normal people. In a house that is a maze of sliding panels, host Atwill has just received a note threatening him with murder at midnight. Opens tomorrow.

Trans-Lux

"AIR WAVES." The leading short at the newsreel theater this week traces radio and broadcasting from the time of the crystal set to the technical perfections of today. "The City of Song" is a Venetian travelogue and "Choice of a Pal" describes many types of dogs. Betty Boop is in the cartoon, "Musical Mountaineers," and there are 35 minutes of the latest newsreels. Opens tomorrow.

Glen Echo

THE SWIMMING POOL at the Amusement Park is now open from 9:30 a. m. to 11:30 p. m. In the Spanish Gardens ballroom, Lawrence Welk and his "Champagne Music" play for dancing each evening, except Sundays, with Mildred Stanley as featured songstress. The usual amusement attractions are in full swing, with the Waterway Canal leading in popularity.

Mount Vernon

"ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT" opens this evening at the drive-in theater on the Richmond Highway to run through Saturday. On Sunday, through the following Wednesday, the auto theater announces a double bill guaranteed to keep the drowsiest drivers awake. "Frankenstein" and "Dracula" are the thrillers, with the former being shown twice each evening and the latter for one performance only.

Wilson Line

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON leaves its Seventh street wharf each evening, except Monday, at 8:30 for a Moonlight Cruise down the Potomac, with McWilliams Orchestra aboard for dancing. The City of Washington also makes three trips daily to Marshall Hall, the playground on the Potomac, at 10 a. m., 2 and 5:30 p. m., as well as two trips daily to Mount Vernon, at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m., with an hour and a half stopover at the Washington home.

S. S. Potomac

CHICK WEBB brings Ella Fitzgerald and his rhythm band for this week-end's cruises on the S. S. Potomac. The Cotton Club favorite's cruise ship will leave its Seventh and Water streets moorings on Saturday night at 8:45 and again at 12:30 a. m., with torrid tempos swinging right and left. On Sunday afternoon, the S. S. Potomac sails for its 75-mile Sunday cruise at 2:15 p. m. Each evening, the steamer makes its regular moonlight cruise at 8:45, with Johnny Johnson's band aboard.

Cross Roads

"ABIE'S IRISH ROSE." History's longest run play (despite "Tobacco Road's" present threat) opens the bucolic season for the straw-hatted playgoer. The Cross Roads Theater is located at Baileys Cross Roads, where the Columbia Turnpike crosses the Leesburg Pike. Howard Wentworth, of the Pierce Hall Players, is directing the locally noted cast, with Don Sisler, Peggy Johnston, Ruth May, Charles Hohein, Edmond Evans, Theodore Field and Lewis Brott.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., May 31.—If the gentlemen who see "The Women" have as much fun as the crew who are watching it being made, it will be an enormous success. Director George Cukor takes scenes over and over until his victims get just the right nuance of witchery before he calls "cut." What a trailer they'd have if they took George's face while he's directing.

HOPPER

There was Roz Russell, chief cat, in a white and black taffeta bustled dress with a tight, old fashioned basque. And three spears on her head, hoping to stab every member of the cast at the same time. Norma Shearer was in black velvet wearing a crystal boutonniere, a miniature of the chandelier hanging over her head, which came from an Austrian palace.

And the gal getting away with loot and Norma's husband, Joan Crawford, looking like the cat that swallowed the canary, saying she was delighted to be playing a bad woman. They're so meaty. She's longed for years to get away from those sticky Cinderellas Joan in a fur suit with swagger hip-length coat, birds of paradise shooting off her head at just the right angle to blind people. Joan's already bought it for Joan.

Between scenes Norma said, "Come over to poverty row and looked at my new bungalow." And as I stepped through the doorway, there was a living room you'd be proud to call "home," all modern equipment. She'd christened it the day before and everybody, including crew, had champagne. I would be a day late! They were drinking tea when I got there. Which looked pretty silly for a lot of bad girls!

Norma said, "You know, I hesitated a long time before playing this part. Then I decided that fighting to hold a husband is every woman's problem. This makes it amusing and helpful."

Sidney Guilaroff had just persuaded me to have my hair cut short like Norma's when she said, "Hedda, have you time, with all your work, to get a permanent weekly? Huh?"

"That's what I have to do. I'm a hair grower, and so are you."

Not everyone can be saved from the shears by Shearer and I'm grateful.

Incidentally, that hilarious dancing contest at Elsa Maxwell's party began when Roz Russell was doing a gavotte with George Cukor. Along came Lubitsch, who said, "Cukor will get you a close-up, Roz, but you'll have to dance with Norma if you want to keep it in 'The Women.'" Which made them all laugh so hard that Norma grabbed Roz and they started dancing together. That started everybody in the room doing the same thing.

The girls on the set were chuckling over their dark make-up. Norma's skin is like peaches and cream, so she wears nothing but a little powder, which causes one of the girls to comment while seeing the rushes the other day, "How come, that on the screen, while I'm sitting right beside Norma, my face looks as though it had been shot in a dark closet."

Joan Fontaine is dancing on air because Lucile Watson, who's playing Norma's mother, wants her to come to Bar Harbor and play in Lucile's new one, "Marriage Royal." And Lucile says if she stays away from dramatic schools, she will teach her everything. Is Joan going? You've said it!

Sister Olivia de Havilland wants to play in Charles Coburn's Mohawk Festival. And while their mother is visiting up north, they call themselves the Gush Sisters—Dottie and Lily!

There, looking better than she did when she was one of the biggest stars, was Aileen Pringle with three lines to speak and a day's work. But she was wearing a new aquamarine ring the size of Rockefeller Center, sent her by Nicholas Murray, New York photographer. Pringle denies any engagement.

Everyone adores her, 'cause she laughs at herself first. She said, "In 1938 I had one day's work. Beginning of this year I started working for Greer and Banton, which, praise be, got a lot of publicity. So far I've had three parts in pictures—all heads of smart dressmaking establishments. I'm still with Greer and Banton and do we have fun?"

If Adrian wasn't our greatest designer, he'd earn that title for his clothes in this picture. He's done 150 dresses—50 for the fashion show. A white and red evening number, gown white, form-fitting, with a splash of red over the chest like a decoration, goes down into a sort of sun pleat at hem, long military cape, half white, half red, held together with a huge diamond clasp. We just drooled over it.

Then there's a little Reno number, because as you know, every woman who goes there comes away either with a cowboy or memories of one. 'Twas a long white crepe skirt, a beige suede jacket, epaulettes were miniature saddles with stirrups hanging down either side, and a tooled leather belt 4 inches wide. If that doesn't have our divorcees crying in their cocktails, I don't know what will.

Cat's Meow Had to Be on That Track

If you notice the plaintive mewing of a cat throughout the stable scenes of "Gantry the Great," Director William McGann wants you to know there was nothing he could do about it.

"Star" of the production is 15-year-old blind steeple jumper Elmer Gantry. Elmer was stabled at the famous Janss horse breeding establishment in Ventura county during shootin on his picture.

He worked there with Top Row, Boxthorne, Special Agent and other winners of track fortunes. All these beauties have stable mascots and Special Agent can't get along without his cat friend.

"Agent's Cat" caused all the sound trouble. He wouldn't shop mewing. And if they took him away Special Agent tried to kick the back out of his stall.

Now It Can Be Told

Concurrent with the return to Hamburg of 7,000 members of the Condor Legion, the Hitler regime has seen fit to reveal the extent to which the German army, navy and air force participated officially in the Spanish civil war.

Except in detail the story is not news. The boast of the Nazi press that the democracies were tricked into minimizing German help to Gen. Franco is only partially true. There were many newspapers, The Post among them, which repeatedly called attention to the scope of German and Italian intervention in Spain and its vital bearing on the progress and, ultimately, on the outcome of the war.

The German government itself now makes plain how vital its assistance to the Nationalists proved to be. In the first weeks of the struggle, for instance, that aid made it possible for Franco to transport Moorish troops by plane from Spanish Morocco to the mainland. Had it not been for that intervention, the German press exults, the unpopular rebellion would have been put down.

The Nazi press has some justification for its boast. There were elements in this country and in Great Britain and France that allowed themselves to be fooled by German denials of intervention. The unpleasant facts did not fit into their picture of the kind of war the Spanish struggle actually was. They preferred to forget that Franco's victories were made possible with the aid of a regime which, while ostensibly assisting the cause of Christianity in Spain, was engaged in a violent persecution of Catholics and Protestants, as well as Jews, at home.

And so, while much was made of the assistance rendered the Republicans by Russia, there was a closing of eyes and stopping of ears to what was happening on Franco's side. It is this element which is now confronted with the Nazi boast that "there was no major engagement of the war in whose execution the (German) legion did not participate in a decisive manner."

Alienating Capital

From Chile come reports that American and British oil companies have been ordered to liquidate their holdings within three months to make way for a government monopoly in the distribution and sale of petroleum products. The decision to dispossess the foreign companies is said to have been due to Mexico's expropriation of the British and American oil-producing companies within her boundaries. That action gives Chile access to oil supplies through direct negotiation with the Mexican government.

Of course, Chile and all other sovereign states have the right to nationalize any industries they may choose, and to take private property for public use on such terms as they may dictate. The Chilean government announces that the companies will be paid the value of their properties. But even in cases where compensation is withheld, or is wholly inadequate, there is seldom any effective redress open to the dispossessed.

Nevertheless, capital-poor countries, dependent upon foreign financial aid to assist their industrial development, have to pay a heavy penalty for the privilege of dispossessing foreign investors and setting up monopolies at their expense. The action of Mexico in taking over British and American oil properties, even though the government lacked resources with which to make reasonable compensation, dealt a severe blow to investment confidence in the United States.

A great deal has been said of late about the possibility of expanding our trade outlets in Latin America by employing idle capital to develop the natural resources and further the industrial expansion of that part of the world. But if Mexico's example should be followed by other countries to the south of us, very little American capital will be available for such ventures in the future.

Our investors have already suffered heavy losses in Latin America as a result of mistakes of judgment. Now, to the hazards inseparable from foreign investments in industrially-undeveloped regions, are added possibilities of loss from government expropriation of American-owned properties. Under such circumstances our citizens will be increasingly reluctant to risk putting capital into countries where the insecurity of the investment is obvious.

A Plan For Archangels

Government-insured capital loans to finance small businesses were recently advocated by Adolf A. Berle, jr., in testimony before the Temporary National Economic Committee. The Senate Banking Committee has now opened hearings on the Mead bill, which would give effect to this suggestion and authorize the RFC to act as the insuring agency.

A proposal of this sort is much more iconoclastic than appears at first sight. Its far-reaching implications can best be appreciated by reading the memorandum which Mr. Berle presented to the TNEC, entitled "A Banking System for Capital and Capital Credit."

Mr. Berle regards the insured loan plan as merely an interim measure to afford small business men access to capital. Ultimately he thinks that the entire banking system should be "reset" to give the small concern "as clean-cut an avenue to American finance as the larger corporation." His aim is, obviously, to assure the preservation of small businesses unable to tap the capital markets by selling securities, yet equally unable to finance themselves without outside help.

For the Government to guarantee banks against losses on long-time loans to borrowers of this type would place in the hands of Federal officials a tremendous power of control over our economic life. There would be no way to test the safety of advances made under such conditions. The amount of discretion involved would leave more than ample scope for arbitrary and preferential treatment of applicants for loans.

That, however, would be only a beginning. For Mr. Berle favors a revolutionary reformation of our banking and credit machinery for the further purpose of placing capital funds at the disposal of public authorities engaged in the construction of nonprofit enterprises. The capital credit banks, through which funds would be obtained under the Berle plan, would be permitted to charge varying rates of interest "determined as much by social factors, and by the need of the country for construction in general, and the particular kind of construction in particular, as by any desire to reap a banking profit."

In short, the insured capital loan for small business is looked upon as only a modest precursor of a much more ambitious plan for making capital loans available for all kinds of public and private business which those in authority might wish to preserve for the sake of the general welfare.

Advocates of such proposals assume that the responsible officials in control would know what is best for the country and that they would conscientiously and intelligently carry out plans for apportioning capital funds in the most beneficial ways. Such assumptions are scarcely tenable. How, for instance, does one distinguish between the efficient and the inefficient small concern when the profitability of the business is no longer the test of survival value?

The authoritarian states are run on the principle of fostering those economic activities that, in the opinion of the dictators and their bureaucratic aides, ought to survive. Impersonal tests of industrial efficiency, which go far to decide the question of survival under a free competitive system, are discarded. Plans for preserving small industries, or for expanding industries unable to obtain capital funds without Government intervention, savor strongly of the methods of the regimented states of continental Europe.

To believe in Mr. Berle's capital credit banking system one must have an almost childlike faith in the ability of those in authority to make economic developments fit preconceived ideas. One would also need assurances now lacking of the ability, impartiality and administrative skill of those officials who would direct the flow of capital funds into investment channels, unhampered by the customary restrictions that now limit and control the lending process.

Ends And Means

The shortcomings of the machine age have long been a topic for discussions, most of them centering around the reality of progress. Again, at the 150th anniversary celebration of Georgetown University, pleas for a return to the principles of medieval thinking were voiced by several of the speakers.

In connection with this, the point was made by Dr. Piritim A. Sorokin, chairman of the Sociology Department at Harvard University, that man's happiness has not been increased by any aspect of modern culture and that the bloodiest century, out of 25 studied, is that which we now endure.

Of course it may be recalled that medieval men were no pikers when it came to thinking up inhuman devices of war and torture, even though they were not able to carry them out on as magnificent a scale as we can. Perhaps these activities may be attributed to the failure of medieval thought to permeate its age. If so, we moderns are entitled to a similar alibi.

But, at the same time, some of the greatest thinkers who have ever lived and written were in the Middle Ages developing lines of inquiry which have been too much neglected of late. St. Thomas Aquinas, to mention only one, discussed at great length the object of men's lives, which presumably is to be happy, and the best methods to obtain that object through their own activities and through their relations with the state. Of course it is not sufficient to think about these problems; they must be discussed with and pointed out to the younger generation who will eventually have to solve them to some extent, if the twentieth century is not to grow progressively more grim.

So it is not really a return to anything musty or old that is being advocated in praising the principles of medieval thinking. It is, instead, a more rational approach to some distinctly modern problems, many of which have been created by the machine and none of them solved by it. What we forget, but cannot indefinitely continue to ignore, is that the possession of tools is less important than the knowledge of how to use them. And this the men like Roger Bacon knew.

More Heat Than Light

The sincerity of Maj. Gen. Moseley's patriotism is no more open to question than is the strength of his convictions on the subject of Communist machinations. And his very distinguished career as an Army officer, including several important diplomatic assignments accomplished with notable skill, makes it impossible to dismiss his opinions as of negligible importance.

It is the real distinction of the man which made his testimony before the Dies committee yesterday the more unfortunate. If a citizen of more limited capacities and less fortunate background should urge turning the Army against the "enemy within our gates" it would be quickly and easily dismissed as ranting of a negligible variety. From a man of Gen. Moseley's standing such assertions demand examination.

And yet the more attention is given to Gen. Moseley's attitude the less convincing and constructive it seems. What he advocates, in effect, is that the ordinary civil authority should be subordinated to military action of a frankly dictatorial nature, directed against those whose social viewpoint he dislikes. And this, from the viewpoint of American traditions, is about as subversive a doctrine as could be preached.

On reflection Gen. Moseley will doubtless regret some of the more impassioned utterances which he let fall during the heat of the hearing yesterday. He will presumably realize how utterly incompatible they are with the constitutional guarantees which the Army, in the last analysis, exists to protect. He will conclude, it may be hoped, that however acute America's ills, a leaf out of "Mein Kampf" is not the prescription which will cure them.

Men who reach Gen. Moseley's position in our Army are generally discreet and thoughtful gentlemen. On retirement they carry over into civilian life the characteristics of dignity and reticence which they have learned in service. It is, happily, unusual to find retired officers of high rank whose emotions triumph over the reflective quality to the extent noticeable in Gen. Moseley's testimony yesterday.

Mixed Drinks

To put all your eggs in one basket is traditionally an unwise action. But recollection of the proverb will be cold consolation for the miserable waiter who had to put all his cocktails on one tray, and then dropped it just as the King and Queen entered the hall for the official welcoming luncheon extended to them by Victoria, B. C.

The little tragedy was covered in two lines of Mr. Folliard's dispatch to The Post yesterday. But it contains all the elements on which a Balzac or a Thomas Hardy would build a novel. And, in addition, it must have seemed, to the main character in the drama, too ghastly to be true.

The waiters were undoubtedly chosen for the occasion because of demonstrated proficiency. Probably they were rehearsed and instructed for days before the great occasion. And it is safe to guess that the cocktails were mixed with loving kindness by the best bartender in the neighborhood. All was as it should be. The pride of Victoria was to serve its King.

But, as is so often the case, too great effort ended in failure. And a waiter who had presumably never dropped anything more frangible than an "h" chose the psychological moment to let the royal cocktails crash to the floor.

There is nothing that can be helpfully said on such occasions, nor anything to do. But, if his mind had not been as numb as his fingers, the waiter might have relieved himself by muttering:

"O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw and resolve itself into a dew."

Or, better, into a reconstituted tray of cocktails.

"Basis Of Democracy"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Respect for the individual is the basis of democracy. He has inalienable rights, but to make democracy work each individual must help to grant the same rights to his fellow citizens. He must therefore be tolerant and sympathetic toward others. Every person, if given a chance, can contribute something to the general good.

The writer knows that in many enlightened school areas to the south of Washington, young white students are being taught and are evincing a real desire to become more tolerant and fair in dealing with the Negro in their own midst, rather that fritter away useful time cultivating an academic tolerance toward the heathen or foreigners that they have never seen.

Many of our local problems of health, of crime, of delinquency, of poverty, of taxation, and of suffrage would be nearer solution were we older people wise enough, bold enough, or capable of teaching the young generation how to live better together for the greater good of all.

"The Syllabus Of Errors"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Someone should inform "Liberal," whose letter was published in The Post of May 20, that the Syllabus of Errors is used by enemies of the Catholic Church as a foundation on which to hurl their charges that the church is opposed to the state, seeking supremacy over it everywhere, and opposed as well to liberty of thought and speech.

Those who have used the Syllabus in their church attack have even woefully misquoted from it, distorting its propositions into corresponding propositions claimed to be church doctrine. It must be remembered that few if any quotations from the Syllabus used for such purpose can be accepted as authentic.

Caribbean Travel

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Comment is made in "The Federal Diary" for May 3 of a report of Federal officials that unsettled conditions in Europe have resulted in a large amount of travel to Puerto Rico. Our response is a "Is that so? Funny we haven't heard about it down here."

The interest of travelers in Puerto Rico most certainly has increased, but you have to remember that travelers can't get to Puerto Rico unless they travel on boats, and we have had no improvement in oceanic steamship servce in the last 20 or 30 years. The government of Puerto Rico has spent a lot of money and has worked hard to attract visitors to Puerto Rico, but we make little headway because we get absolutely no co-operation from any of the Federal agencies that could do something about our inadequate steamship service.

We have deepened the harbor entrance channel, advertised, hired publicity men, sent speakers out and engaged in every other promotional activity known to resort areas. People have learned where Puerto Rico is and what it has to offer, but they cannot get here. The cruise ship owners route their vessels to all the islands in the Caribbean except Puerto Rico and the one company carrying first-class passengers between here and New York operates two limited-capacity ships in the weekly service.

When someone says that tourist business in Puerto Rico has been stimulated by unsettled conditions in Europe he is talking through his hat. All the stimulation that has been done has been done by Puerto Rico. We have spent our hard-earned money and would greatly appreciate fewer fanciful reports on what has not happened and a little more active work to force the Maritime Commission to acknowledge that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States.

Strange Allies?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Yes, indeed; adversity does bring strange bedfellows, as the Germans are saying about the alliance between Britain and Russia; but do they forget the strange alliance between Austria and Italy before the war which did not stand up under the strain? What did we see then but Italy standing neutral, thereby branding the central powers as the aggressors? Now we see the chief aggressor and the chief accuser in a close alliance.

Virgil's Lessons

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The writer of The Post Impressionist column for May 29 caused his hero to cite, in a diatribe against the teaching of cultural subjects, two examples unfortunate for his argument. His "Freyling" says, "The issue . . . is the function of a liberal college . . . Do you shelter the students from grim reality, steep them in the eternal verities of the Classics and hope that Virgil and Xenophon will fortify them against the unhappy day when they meet the nasty old facts of life off the campus . . .?" Perhaps a reply to the speaker will come with some grace from one who practices a scientific profession and teaches allied courses at a nearby university.

Mr. Alfred Friendly has either not read his Virgil and his Xenophon or has forgotten them. If not, he would have realized that Virgil could have taught his students how one courageous man met war, calamity, destruction and exile. With his city flaming over his head he took his old father on his back, his little son by the hand, and went forth to found a new civilization.

Xenophon, too, has more to teach modern students than "the World Today Crowd" knows. When his 10,000 Greeks were left stranded in the far interior of a hostile country, they did not sit down and snivel for a government to come to their rescue. They gathered up their resources, chose leaders, and fought their way back home, living off their enemies in the process.

Choose other examples next time, Mr. Friendly.

Appreciation

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This note is to express the appreciation of the Health Department for the excellent editorial appearing in The Post of May 27 concerning the progress we have been striving to make for better health conditions in Washington.

While it is a matter of gratification to us here in the department to know that we are gaining some measure of success, it is even more of a pleasure to find that others know of it and approve. Thank you for the encouragement you have given us.

We feel that the article was particularly well done, and appreciate your courtesy and interest.

Debt Week

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: National Debt Week, if it has done nothing more, has unleashed some remarkable statements and much heated derision against the spirit of their own previous economy pledges and the principles of sound government, by New Deal Democrats.

Discussion of why capital was idle and remains in that condition of moribund withdrawal, has been carefully omitted. But at least a new synonym for idleness and subsistence on relief has been devised. It is called "employment of the people."

It is not stated which has done more to "enrich the nation"—the idle capital, or the idle hands of the 20,000,000 forgotten men "saved" by the New Deal.

Another View On USHA Subsidies

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with much interest your recent discussions of housing subsidies and the replies to your editorials by Administrator Straus of the United States Housing Authority. May I say that it seems to me you have missed one of the strongest arguments in favor of your original contention that the subsidies granted by the USHA are too high.

The housing act clearly provides that "the fixed contribution payable annually under any contract shall in no case exceed a sum equal to the annual yield, at the going Federal rate of interest at the time such contract is made, plus 1 per centum, upon the development or acquisition cost of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved." While the limit on subsidies contained in this sentence is related to the "going Federal rate of interest," the intention of Congress seems to have been to restrict these subsidies to 1 per cent more than the Government pays for the money it borrows and lends to local housing authorities.

Mr. Straus points out that the USHA is now borrowing funds for 1⅜ per cent interest. As you have noted, the USHA is able to borrow money for only five years at this rate, and it has lent this same money for 60 years. Under these circumstances, it seems entirely unreasonable to assume, as Mr. Straus has done, that the difference between 1⅜ per cent interest and the 3 per cent charged local housing authorities for this money is actually a saving to the Government.

But let us assume for the purpose of the argument that Mr. Straus is right on this point. If it is really costing the USHA only 1⅜ per cent in interest for the capital it is using, then it seems to me that adherence to the spirit of the law would require that agency to reduce its subsidies to 2⅜ per cent or 1 per cent more than the interest which the USHA must pay.

If the USHA is not willing to do that, I think it should certainly drop the pretense that it may be able to borrow money during the next 60 years at the low interest rates now prevailing for short-term bonds.

The Post Impressionist

Holiday

YOU DO NOT realize at once just what it is, but your subconsciousness registers an unaccustomed note as soon as you come out of the building into the Avenue. And then, suddenly, you are aware that there is a strange quietness over the downtown streets. The flow of traffic has stopped on the Avenue and its tributaries; not an auto, not a bus, not a streetcar is running. The whirr of motors, the threatening cry of horns, the long sibilant kissing of rubber on asphalt, the clanging of trolley cars—all that blend of sounds that make the voice of the modern city—is hushed and still. A silence as profound as that of the woods at evening hangs over everything, only accentuated by the undertones that go unheard in the ordinary roar—the shuffle of feet, the murmur of voices. Medieval cities must have been as quiet as this. But to the modern ear it is unnatural and strained, the silence of suppressed noise.

The crowd lined up behind the ropes seems rather apathetic; there are no children here to leaven it with their animation. And yet these people lounging on the curb and trampling the thin strip of half-defeated grass are glad enough for the unexpected gift of a few hours of freedom. The girls from the Government offices walk up and down along the sidewalk idly in groups of two or three, their bright skirts whipping in the light breeze. Sometimes they stop to exchange banter with the knots of boys who lean against the rail outside the buildings. For awhile they are simply human beings enjoying the spring sunshine, the soft spring air, not parts in the vast intricate machinery of government.

In the sunny street outside the ropes a thin line of soldiers stands at ease. Policemen walk up and down importantly. There is an Army band, a small one, near the dirty white statue of Benjamin Franklin. The mild face of the old Postmaster General gazes down benignly; it is hard to accept Max Weber's opinion that this kindly looking man was the most articulate exponent of ruthless capitalism; that "Poor Richard stood at the cradle of the modern economic man."

A sudden gust starts the flags on all the lamp posts stirring; there is an unfamiliar blue and white one everywhere today. The air is filled with a heavy droning, and a squadron of huge bombers appears overhead, flying low and in perfect order. Behind them, and well above, come a group of smaller planes. The sudden appearance of these roaring monsters of the skies frightens a pigeon roosting in the clock tower of the old Postoffice Building, and it streaks away down the Avenue and out of sight. The dark, fortresslike old building looks strangely out of place half surrounded by the pale and splendid new Government office; with its wide arched door and castellated turrets it suggests a medieval church or the Rathaus of some Graustarkian town in central Europe.

There is a quickening in the crowd. Somebody is coming. The soldiers stand to attention; across the street the band strikes up an unfamiliar tune. From the west a long open car appears, coming down the middle of the Avenue at a moderate speed. Its running boards are loaded with taut, watching men. Behind it comes another, equally long, with two people in the back seat, a man and a woman. The light wave of applause that runs along the line of the crowd is for these. It sounds almost dutiful; the American cannot cheer without feeling self-conscious. The man lifts his shining silk hat in response. In a moment both cars have disappeared in the direction of the Capitol.

Standing there in the growing heat it seems a long time before the planes return, heading into the west, again filling the air with their mighty droning. The workmen on the scaffolding of a building in one of the side streets have put down their tools to watch the parade.

Another little while and a line of big cars appears, filled with men in top hats. But it is the tanks that everyone is looking at, small, turreted affairs that clank along swiftly enough, topped by wicked looking little guns, waving red pennons. Men in khaki stand upon their roofs. They wear goggles and odd flattened headgear that make them look like creatures out of a Buck Rogers cartoon, or visitors from one of Mr. Wells' warring worlds. But the tanks are few in number. Behind them come the open cars again, this time flanked by a larger protecting convoy. Again their appearance is greeted by mildly enthusiastic applause.

It is all over very quickly, so quickly, in fact, that the crowd, remembering other parades along this same street, perhaps, still stands by waiting for more to come. The policemen remain in their places, leaning back against the ropes with folded arms. But by and by the soldiers form in line and march away by twos. Their uniforms look hot and their new yellow boots squeak in unison as they pass by. Most of them are clad in the familiar khaki, but one company wears the new, sporty looking blue-gray outfits. At close range they all seem to be quite young and rather undersized, but stocky and richly tanned.

Workmen are beginning to take down the ropes; there is no doubt now that the spectacle is over. Most of the policemen have vanished. A truck of the street-cleaning department appears from nowhere and begins to sweep up the debris. A trolley car comes to a halt at the corner. The crowds of workers drift back to the Government buildings. They push into the elevators to be hoisted swiftly aloft to their cubicles, back to the typewriters and the adding machines and the files and the mountains and mountains of paper of which Government is made. The holiday is over.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Artistic Slop

MISS DOROTHY DAY, a former rough-and-tumble radical who became a Catholic, has written a book called "From Union Square to Rome," in which she asks herself if the old desire to be with the poor and mean and abandoned was not mixed with a distorted desire to be with the dissipated.

The question has arisen in other lands, prompted by the conduct and language and the studied physical and moral frowsiness of individuals who have identified themselves with radical movements. The arts also have served as an excuse for a dirty way of life, and some artists of this type, being incompetent painters and writers, easily persuade themselves that they could command high prices if they would compromise with their principles. They become radical painters and writers to excuse their failure to themselves and disguise it to their friends.

Just A Hazy Alibi For Sloppy Living

GREENWICH Village 20 years ago was a haunt of sloppy fakers who said they desired to live their lives in their own way, unfettered by middle-class conventions—which was another way of saying that they wanted to engage in some promiscuous sleeping-around and didn't like soap. They had read about the art and independent thinking in a dirty quarter of Paris, and for a time maintained a similar artistic and intellectual slum in New York, most of whose inhabitants overdrank and produced punk poetry and short stories and incoherent smears on canvas.

There were quite a few young corn-fed frauds of both sexes from the Middle West, putting into effect ideas of conduct and morality which they had heard talked up on the campus, but the colony in New York, as well as the one in Paris, also included unsightly females of considerable age with small private incomes who liked to sit around nasty little joints listening to the talk and reading of the unwashed literati, and squinting at distorted pictures and imagine themselves to be of the arts.

Art Was Excuse For Personal Filth

IN SUMMER groups of such people move to places in the far suburbs to go around half naked, if not altogether nude, and the town of Westport, Conn., which did have a colony of legitimate artists, suffered from the presence of carousing counterfeits. The neighbors got an impression that art meant free love, personal filth and drunkenness, and that most writers and artists were communists, because the incompetents are likely to condemn a system which refuses to appreciate their talents.

It was not any scientific curiosity that prompted the fad of Viennese mind-probing, but an appetite for horribly foul sex stuff and the hope of dirty people that some head-feeler would tell them that they could cure their nervousness only by spending a week-end in a cabin off somewhere away from it all with some other man's girl or some other woman's gentleman friend. Medical necessity might thus justify conduct which otherwise would be difficult to explain, and when both members of a domestic combination were similarly troubled the doctor's orders were likely to be regarded as law.

Radicals Purport To Be Intelligent

RADICAL THOUGHT and belief does not truly express itself in filthy attire and dirty fingernails, for radicals purport to be intelligent, and it is only the ignorant who have an excuse for dirt when soap and water are almost free and whiskbrooms are a dime. Nevertheless, affected frowsiness has come to be offered as evidence of advanced thought, and profane and obscene speech is sometimes offered by women as proof that they are fighting mad at the condition of the poor or the sufferings of the Spanish Communists, and don't give a damn for the opinion of the complacent respectables who wash their smug and stupid faces.

Probably it is not so much the radical ideas, but offensive personalities and on warm days an odor as of something not quite fresh which has made most Americans suspicious of radicalism. There is also a deterrent in the apparent, though not real requirement that to sympathize with radical ideas one must give up hygiene, become personally filthy and, as between husband and wife, each agree that the other may jump the fence whenever he or she is troubled by a dream.

Hazen May Open Hahn's New Shoe Store

The new Hahn Building at Seventh and K streets northwest will be formally opened with a special ceremony Monday morning. District duties permitting, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen plans to turn the key officially opening the firm's latest shoe store unit.

The store is in a modern two-story building and replaces the old red brick structure destroyed by fire two years ago. It will be the newest in a chain of shoe stores founded here 63 years ago by William Hahn.

Officials and employes of the company will hold "open house" during the day to welcome old customers and friends. The Hahn Progress Club, made up of store employes, will celebrate in the evening with a dance.

The Vice President Speaks

("Vice President Garner says he wishes Congress would quit fussing and adjourn so he can get back to Texas and see his 95 newly hatched bantam chicks."—News item.)

I

I feel the yen for Texas now—
I crave Uvalde's sun;
This time of year I always get Quite sick of Washington.
I know that these are crucial days
With trouble in the air
But I would quit and go back home—
For I've got "banties" there.

II

Grave problems still unsettled are—
The Nation's in a mess;
This Congress has enough to do
To stick all year I guess;
I know new problems come each day
To keep us in a fix
But still I'd like to drop 'em all
And see those bantam chicks.

III

Taxation problems and the like
Demand attention here;
They'll keep us fussin' I suppose
Until quite late this year;
I never shirk my duty and
I know there's work to do
But 95 new banty chicks . . .
Well, they're important, too.

IV

I'm overfond of banties and
I don't know why it's so
Unless, despite their littleness
They have no urge to grow;
To be quite small, yet satisfied
Today is pretty rare—
Outside of bantam chicks and such
It's missing everywhere.

V

We've bantams in the Senate, yes,
And in the House as well.
But they will not admit it as
They pout and puff and swell;
Give me the banties on a farm
Far from a city flat—
Where banties know they're banties and
Just let it go at that.

VI

They come to greet me at my call
And flutter 'round my feet;
They never say "We want more corn
Or we'll turn on the heat;"
They light upon my shoulders and
I like the way it feels
To know that they are not concerned
In making any deals.

L'envoi

Oh, let this Congress cease to fuss!
The days are getting warm
And life is mightily pleasant down
Upon a Texas farm;
I've 95 new bantie chicks
Hatched out this very spring . . .
War worries? Taxes? Probes and plots?
They just don't mean a thing!

Today And Tomorrow

Senator Taft Objects

SENATOR TAFT objects to comment that has appeared in this column on his part in the Senate's proceedings which added nearly $400,000,000 to the Agricultural Department appropriation bill. He says that I have been "exceedingly unfair" and that I have made statements which are "simply untrue."

If I have been unfair to Mr. Taft, I shall be glad to apologize. If I have made an untrue statement, I should like to correct it. So it is necesary to examine the record.

The first comment to which Mr. Taft objects was published three days after the Senate had on May 8, without a roll call, adopted nearly 100 amendments which added about 45 per cent to the Agricultural appropriation bill. Senator Taft was present in the Senate on that occasion. But he took no part in the discussion. He did not question a single item. He did not protest against the whole proceeding. My comment on this was that "in one day's work, without a roll call, the Senate, with the assistance and consent of all the orators who have denounced spending, have denounced deficits, namely Mr. Taft and Mr. Vandenberg and Mr. Byrd, added another 10 per cent to next year's anticipated deficit."

MR. TAFT CALLS this exceedingly unfair to him. I am unable to agree. I think that I may have been unfair to Mr. Vandenberg since he did at least take part in the discussion, seconding Senator King, who made a long speech against spending. But it does not seem to me an unfairness to Senator Taft to say that by his silence on that critical day he gave consent and assistance to the bipartisan raid on the Treasury and the budget.

Mr. Taft points out in a letter that he voted against the increases in the Appropriations Committee, and that in "a Nation-wide broadcast" on Tuesday, that is to say the day after the battle for economy had been lost, he called attention to his vote in the committee. But I call attention to his silence when the question was being decided on the floor of the Senate.

The second comment to which he objects was published on May 27; that is to say two weeks after the final vote in the Senate. Pointing out that there were only 14 Senators "recorded as opposing," among then Senator Vandenberg, I went on to say that "Senator Taft, the outstanding Republican Presidential candidate in the Senate," was "not among those who went on record as opposed to a spending measure which has increased by 45 per cent the appropriation asked for by the New Deal."

MR. TAFT SAYS that this is untrue. Although he was not present when the vote was taken, he was paired with Senator Mead, of New York, and when the pair was announced, Senator Wagner, of New York, stated that "if the junior Senator from Ohio were present, he would vote 'nay.'" I acknowledge that Senator Taft did here go on record as opposed to the measure, and I regret my error. I based my statement on the official roll call printed on page 7726 of the Congressional Record for May 12, where Senator Vandenberg is recorded as voting "nay" whereas Senator Taft is recorded as "not voting." I did not notice the announcement of his pair with Senator Mead which appears on page 7725.

By way of extenuation for this oversight I may perhaps say that no one else seems to have noticed Senator Taft's pair or to have reported him as being opposed to the bill. The Associated Press account did not record Mr. Taft as opposed to the measure. The United Press did not. The New York Herald Tribune and the New York Times did not. The Cleveland Plain Dealer in Mr. Taft's own State gave a list of the Senators opposing which does not include Mr. Taft's name, and said "Senator Taft was out of town." The Des Moines Register, in the heart of the farm belt, mentioned Senators King, Adams, Glass and Edwin C. Johnson, who made efforts to reduce the appropriation, listed the Senators opposed to the increase and failed to mention Mr. Taft's name. The Chicago Tribune also overlooked his opposition. So did The Washington Post. And so did Time.

IT WOULD APPEAR, therefore, that neither the two great news agencies nor these representative newspapers regarded it as necessary to report Mr. Taft's pair. So I am disposed to say that while Mr. Taft is on record as opposing the bill, his opposition was of a kind which caused him to be classified as "not voting" in the formal roll call of the Senate, and caused him to be unreported in the newspaper press.

What does this all show? It shows, it seems to me, that Mr. Taft gave up the fight for economy in this field after his unsuccessful efforts in the Appropriations Committee. When the bill reached the Senate he sat in silence while the increases were being adopted, and he went out of town when the bill as a whole came up for a vote. I think it would have been more impressive if he had stood up and fought the thing on the floor of the Senate from start to finish, and that, if he had the economy bloc might not now be in a state of moral collapse.

Third Term And Farley

By Mark Sullivan

Will He Help President?

THE FACTS about the Democratic Presidential situation begin, of course, with President Roosevelt. The first question is, What is his state of mind? We know much about his temperament in general—that he likes to do dramatic things, that he enjoys breaking precedent, departing from tradition. As to his immediate state of mind about the particular question of a third term, we know nothing specific. That is not, for the present, in the world of fact.

There is one tangible fact. Some radicals, and miscellaneous left-wingers close to Mr. Roosevelt, are promoting a "draft Roosevelt" movement. For this movement the left-wing promoters have strong reasons of their own. Their place in public life depends wholly on Mr. Roosevelt remaining in the White House. They have practically no political standing of their own. Any change in the Presidency would send them back to private life.

Also, some of the radicals have an "ideological" reason. They wish to bring about in America a change, a new order, which they express under various names, or conceal under no name. In the introduction of a new order, wherever it has taken place in Europe, an early step is to destroy old traditions, old symbols. In America, breach of the tradition against a third term would be such a step.

Will Farley Help Draft Movement?

MUCH OF THE ANSWER about Mr. Roosevelt depends on how widely and actively the "draft" movement can be worked up to be. About that, time will tell. If the draft movement becomes strong enough to enable Mr. Roosevelt to seem to respond to a popular call, that would be one thing. If, on the other hand, Mr. Roosevelt should be obliged to ask for a third term, demand it and struggle for it, that would be another thing. This might readily deter Mr. Roosevelt.

In all this a very important question is Mr. Farley. He is, indeed, several questions. We can list them:

Does Mr. Farley want Mr. Roosevelt to have a third term? To that the answer is, probably, no.

Will Mr. Farley help the radicals work up a draft movement? To that also the answer is probably no.

But then comes the question: What will Mr. Farley do if Mr. Roosevelt asks him to help toward a third nomination? That request would give Mr. Farley a good deal of pain. If he answered yes, if he gave active help, then the third nomination would probably occur.

Whom Would Farley Want For President?

IF MR. FARLEY resists importunity to help toward a third term, the question would arise, for what reason does he resist? To resist for the sake of preserving an American tradition, would be the strongest position Mr. Farley could take. But at once the question would be made personal. In whose interest does Mr. Farley resist? If Mr. Farley does not want Mr. Roosevelt, whom does he want? That question will be asked Mr. Farley, straight. It will be asked by the left-wingers who are trying to stage a draft for Mr. Roosevelt. Tacitly, at least, it will be asked by Mr. Roosevelt. The question is inherent in the situation.

Will Mr. Farley reply—will he put himself, and keep himself, in a position to reply—that he has no choice for the Presidency, that he will be satisfied with any good candidate, that he is only opposing Mr. Roosevelt because of conscientious conviction against a third term?

Roosevelt Needs Farley's Assistance

THERE IS ANOTHER position that Mr. Farley could take. He could choose a man, let us say Secretary of State Cordell Hull. He could say that he wants Mr. Hull, not only to avoid a third term but also because Mr. Hull would be a good candidate and a good President.

This is about as far as anyone can see today. Further speculation must wait until after two conditions have arrived, or been passed over. The first is whether Mr. Roosevelt tries to get a third nomination. The second is, assuming Mr. Roosevelt tries, whether Mr. Farley unites with him, or declines to help.

If Mr. Roosevelt makes the effort, but makes it without Mr. Farley's help, we might see a chaotic condition. We might see a prolonged deadlock between pro-Roosevelt and anti-Roosevelt forces—such as the three weeks of deadlock between drys and wets, between McAdoo and Smith, in the 1924 Democratic convention.

However, we are not likely to see that. If Mr. Roosevelt cannot get the nomination without that much commotion, he would not be likely to try for it.

Russia Holds Back

By Barnet Nover

Premier Molotoff's Speech

IT WOULD be rash to say that Premier Molotoff's contemptuous rejection of the latest British-French mutual aid pact proposal dooms all hope of Russia's participation in the antiaggression bloc.

That is now clearly a possibility, although the odds are still against it. What the speech of the Soviet premier and foreign commissar does definitely bring out is that Russia feels herself to be in a highly strategic position and is determined to squeeze every ounce of advantage out of it.

"We insist," said Litvinoff's successor, "on our point of view." In other words, either Great Britain and France agree to a full acceptance of Russia's terms or Russia simply will not play ball with them. She might even, Molotoff hinted, turn around and play ball with the axis, at least in the economic sphere.

THERE IS an undoubted element of bluff in this attitude. Russia entered into negotiations with Great Britain and France out of no sentimental considerations. She did so, presumably, because an Anglo-French-Russian alliance suits Russia's present interests even as it suits the present interests of Great Britain and France. Russia is no less menaced than is Great Britain or France by the spread of aggression in Europe. It is to the interests of all three powers to keep the aggressors in check.

An Anglo-Russian-French alliance would, obviously, be no love match. It would, at best, be a marriage of convenience. But there is nothing wrong with international marriages of convenience. They are, in fact, the only ones worth a hoot.

NOW IF IT is to Russia's advantage to enter a reciprocal defensive arrangement with the democratic powers of western Europe it is, by the same token, not to her advantage to stay out and, by staying out perhaps, to doom the antiaggression bloc to futility.

The Russian leaders realize this. They also realize, and Molotoff's speech provides proof, that in the negotiations with the London and Paris governments they hold the whip hand.

They have not forgotten the treatment of Russia by Chamberlain and Daladier at Munich. And they have now succumbed to the temptation to wield the whip on the bare backs of those statesmen.

They know that Premier Chamberlain, for one, has been extremely reluctant to enter into negotiations with Moscow. They know that every concession he has made to the Russian position has been wrung out of him. And it may be their calculation that, having gone as far as he has in meeting the Russian demands, he has no alternative but to capitulate to the Russian demands.

WE HAVE here in the Anglo-Russian negotiations a curious parallel to what happened to Mr. Chamberlain in his relations with Adolf Hitler last September. Having agreed to the Berchtesgaden demands, the British premier found it difficult to resist the demands made by the Fuehrer at Godesberg which, in turn, made Munich seem momentarily like a victory for peace.

Chamberlain has not yet reached the Munich stage in his dealings with Stalin. But the context of Molotoff's speech shows that the Russians believe he will. Chamberlain may decide, or British public opinion which has driven him into the arms of Russia may decide for him, that having gone so far Great Britain ought to go the whole hog.

In that case, Russia may not only get the kind of alliance she wants, with every clause watertight and every commitment double-barreled, but she would then also be in a position to do some plain and fancy crowing. That would be salve to her wounded pride. And her pride was wounded by the indifference and hostility which Paris and London have shown her. An indication of this is found in Molotoff's childish blast that "our place is in the first rank among the powers."

SINCE 1934, Russia has steadily been courting the western democracies.

She made an alliance with France, but that alliance was never implemented by a military convention. She agreed to an Eastern Locarno. That scheme fell by the wayside because of Polish opposition. She joined the League and became one of its most enthusiastic members. Her enthusiasm coincided, however, with a growing lukewarmness by Great Britain and France toward the Geneva organization. And though an ally of Czechoslovakia, at no time during the crisis of 1938 did Great Britain and France show any disposition to consult her.

The tables are now turned. It is now Russia which is the courted, with Great Britain and France doing the courting. But there is a very real danger that the Russian leaders may overplay their hand. Revenge is sweet. But revenge has as little place in international affairs as sentimentality.

Rumania Drops Democracy for Fascism Today

Chamber, Modeled On Italian Lines, To Be Elected

By the Associated Press.

Bucharest, May 31.—Rumania's last piece of democratic political machinery will be discarded tomorrow in the election of a corporate parliament modeled on Italian Fascist lines.

Two million voters will be asked to approve lists of candidates submitted by Rumania's only party, the Front of National Rebirth which King Carol II created last year to rule unopposed under his guidance.

With political campaigning stifled and the result of the elections a foregone conclusion, public interest was at a low ebb. Only the Chamber of Deputies will be elected by the voters at large, divided into corporations of guilds according to their type of employment.

This leaves Carol free to put the finishing touches on the new Fascist state. His admiration for the Fascist system, however, does not mean that the monarch sees eye to eye with Premier Mussolini of Italy. Italy could point with pride, and that is about all, to Carol's adoption of fascism.

Approximately half the senate is to be chosen by 1,000 guild directors Friday. The rest will be named Monday by King Carol.

Voting has been made easy for workers with little schooling. Each ballot carries the photograph and biography of each candidate, so the choice can be meade at sight in case more than one party member has been allowed to run in a district.

It is Carol's idea for steadying the topsy-turvy politics of his Balkan kingdom. He has made sure it will not curb his authority. When he set up the new party he abolished all the old politcial affiliations.

Oust Communists, Moseley Demands

investigation of subversive activities, said the witness. He added that in time of crisis, "if the Administration went too far to the left, the Army would demur from carrying out orders."

The general, who receives $6,000 a year reirement pay, alleged that the President is "for war" and might lead the Nation into war to carry him through next year's election.

Mosely informed the committee he had recently passed on some of the "terribly disturbing" data to Gen. Malin Craig, Chief of Staff. Mosely said Craig indicated he intended to take action on the basis of the information—but the witness did not indicate just what it would be.

Mosely was accompanied by his counsel, George E. Sullivan, of Washington, and a "friend," who refused to give his name. Next to Mosely sat Representative Thorkelson (Republican), of Montana, who said he appeared at the general's request. Thorkelson was recently proposed by "Liberation," an anti-Semitic journal, as possibly the man behind whom "anti-Liberals," "anti-Roosevelt ians" and "anti-Judaists" can unite.

Moseley insisted that his plan for calling in the Army "if any local government fails to protect life and property" would be carried out by strictly legal methods. A 1929 law, he said, gave the President power to use the Army in such emergencies.

"All these young men who came to see me received the same advice," said Moseley, apparently referring to leaders of anti-Semitic and anti-Communist groups who have discussed their plans with him. "They were all advised to do these things lawfully."

The former general, neatly dressed in a gray-blue suit, striped blue shirt and blue tie, insisted that he had refused to head various "patriotic" organizations because he disapproved of their proposed methods, although indorsing their aims. He continually referred to persons connected with these groups as "patriots."

Met Kuhn

Moseley told the committee that Fritz Kuhn, leader of the German-American Bund, now under indictment for embezzlement, attended a private meeting he addressed a few weeks ago at the home of a Mrs. Rudyard Uzzell, in Jamacia, N. Y. Moseley first denied he knew who was to be present at the meeting, but later admitted authorship of a letter in which he had said, previous to the meeting, that he expected to meet "a number of important individuals" there.

The witness said the only aim of the meeting was to hold "a patriotic gathering of people interested in patriotic purposes." He scoffed at a suggestion of Rhea Whitley, committee counsel, that the meeting had been called to form a national organization of anti-Semitic societies.

Of the 40 guests at the meeting, the only ones Moseley could remember, besides Kuhn and Mrs. Uzzell and her family, was a Mrs. Good, head of a group of "patriotic organizations" centered in Philadelphia, a Mrs. Linn and a former member of the New York Legislature.

Praises Deatherage

George Deatherage, commander of the Knights of the White Camellia, militantly anti-Semitic organization, visited him in Atlanta, the general testified. He added that he had refused to associate himself with Deatherage's organization, but described the head knight as "a two-fisted, honest patriot."

Moseley, whose audience included a number of sympathetic women and two or three Washington leaders of anti-Semitic movements, repeatedly clashed with the committee over the question of reading into the record a lengthy statement he had prepared.

whether they may wish to direct aggression into other channels. That is why we must be vigilant."

The talks are continuing, he said, "but we insist upon our point of view."

"Britain's Chestnuts"

The foreign minister, who recently replaced Maxim Litvinoff in the office of commissar, then proceeded with the viewpoint of the U. S. S. R., which he summed up in these words:

"The Soviet Union insists on a pact of an exclusively defensive character guaranteeing the integrity and independence of all neighbors of the Soviet Union and containing a concrete agreement for mutual help if one of the signatories is attacked.

"The Soviet Union stands unreservedly for union with all peace-loving powers to curb aggression, but we must be careful to remember Stalin's warning not to allow ourselves to be placed in such a position that we must pull other people's chestnuts out of the fire."

Map Approach Reich

Molotoff's gesture of rejection of Britain's present proposals contained the heavily veiled threat that Russia, failing to reach an agreement with Europe's democratic powers, may seek to increase her friendliness with Italy and Germany.

This implication was seen in a statement concerning the U. S. S. R.'s improved relations with Italy and Germany. The statement, however, was coupled with a verbal lashing against aggressor nations. The premier said:

"We do not refuse to improve our trade relations with Germany. As a matter of fact, Soviet-German trade negotiations which were recently carried on and momentarily interrupted, may be resumed."

When Molotoff declared the Soviet Union insisted upon absolute equality with other great powers, he was given a five-minute ovation. Stalin, War Commissar Voroshilov and Litvinoff joined in the cheering.

"Our place is in the first rank among powers," he declared.

Wants Baltic Guarantee

He said the latest British proposals admitted the principle of reciprocity in any "peace front" including the Soviet, which "is a step forward." But he indicated that the proposals did not guarantee the Baltic countries and said Russia therefore could not undertake obligations concerning countries remaining neutral and unable to defend their neutrality.

"The aggressors of the world long ago recognized that Soviet foreign policy is directed against aggression," Molotoff declared. "But the democratic countries only lately have admitted this. Changes in the British attitude were recently noted. We, therefore, accepted offers of negotiations."

In speaking of aggressors, the foreign affairs commissar described the Italo-German military alliance as a treaty "which is fundamentally aggressive in nature." He did not express a wish that any Anglo-French-Soviet defensive pact should be of the same character.

[Molotoff epitomized the foreign situation as follows, according to the Associated Press:

[Italy and Germany are in a mood to brag about their successes, while France and Britain, on the other hand have been trying to minimize these "to pacify public opinion by making believe nothing has happened."

[The Soviet position differs from both of these. Molotoff said:

["The Soviet Union is beyond suspicion of sympathy with aggressors, but it wants the facts given to the public."—Editor's note.].

Relations With Poland

He then referred briefly to an improvement in the Soviet's relations with Poland and pointedly referred to a trade increase between the two countries.

This statement was filled with special significance since the danger of a German attack on Poland to restore Danzig and a portion of the Polish Corridor to Berlin, was one of the basic causes of the Anglo-French move to build a European front against Nazi-Fascist Aggression.

Then the black-haired, be-spectacled little premier launched into the subject of Russia's part in the Far East.

He openely admitted Soviet aid is being given to China's armies. He then declared:

"We are carrying out Stalin's words by deeds.

"We know the difference between words and acts, but the difference must be noticed among the democratic nations, too."

In caustic terms Molotoff reviewed Russian relations with Japan, sorely aggravated last week-end by a serious clash between Outer Mongolian (Russian-trained) troops and Japanese Manchukuoan soldiers, stating:

"Japanese threats against Outer Mongolia are funny and nonsensical. There is a limit to all this nonsense. It is time for the Japanese to cease all provocations.

"Owing to our pact of mutual assistance with Outer Mongolia we will defend the borders of Outer Mongolia just as if they were our own."

Amid a storm of applause and after more than an hour on the speaker's stand he concluded:

"The Soviet Union is not what it was in 1921, but some of our neighbors cannot understand this.

"The reactionary Japanese should know they cannot intimidate us with threats. Soviet rights are and will be defended."

Soon after Molotoff had finished, the deputies unanimously adopted a resolution expressing their approval of the Kremlin's foreign policy. The Supreme Soviet then adjourned.

Britain Is Willing

By the United Press.

London, May 31.—Britain is willing to make the changes asked by the Soviets in the projected British-French-Russian entente, it was understood by diplomats here tonight.

Hope for early consummation of the pact was strengthened also by the interpretation placed on Premier Molotoff's speech by Russian officials here. They termed the speech a "conditional acceptance" of the entente proposal, not a rejection.

The Soviets said, however, that Russia would insist upon "clarification" of certain parts of the plan before giving final acceptance.

Zoning Board Grants Eight Of Nine Pleas

Three Takoma Park Apartments Houses Allowed; Five Asked

The Board of Zoning Adjustment yesterday granted approval to eight persons for zoning variances and deferred action on one appeal.

The board altered the plan of H. L. Thornton to construct the five three-story apartment buildings on the eastern portion of the square bounded by Third Fourth, Aspen and Whittier streets northwest, in Takoma Park, D. C. The board granted permission for three buildings, which must be in Third street. The petition last week was opposed by the Manor Park Citizens Association, Takoma Park, D. C., Citizens Association, and several nearby property owners.

Other variances approved were:

Appeal of Ah Wong to change a nonconforming use from a restaurant to a dry cleaning agency at 210 Second street southeast.

Dr. Joseph Roseman, to erect a one-story rear addition at 1820 Jefferson place northwest.

Dr. A. K. Bowie, to permit erection of a rear fourth-story addition at 301 B street northeast.

Barnett Landsman, to change a nonconforming use from a beauty shop to a health food store at 4 Ninth street southeast.

Appeal of Charles Ferrar, to change a nonconforming use from a barber shop to a delicatessen and confectionery store at 1201 I street southeast.

John Quinn, for permission to establish a gasoline service station on the north side of Massachusetts avenue between Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth streets northwest.

Minnie C., John, Fred L., Katherine, and Clara Schickler, for permission to establish a gasoline service station on the southeast corner of Georgia avenue and Morton street northwest.

Action was deferred on the appeal of Nathan and Samuel Perry, who want to erect a second-story addition to the automobile laundry at 2312-20 Georgia avenue northwest.

Legislators Urge U. S. Back Loans

business, not to mention capital needs."

The Florida Senator said he did not blame banks for the present condition, because "the Government must step in and build an adequate credit system, just as we have built the Federal Reserve system upon a base of private banks."

Most business loans, the legislators said, were outside the range of commercial and private banks because of the long repayment terms involved. If not, they added, the interest rates were too high to encourage normal development.

Describes "Twilight Zone"

Mead said the small business man was in a "twilight zone where neither commercial nor investment banks will help him and where the Government, under existing law, cannot help."

Representative Allen said the requirement that local banks carry the first 10 per cent of loans would tend to "restore character loans which have almost passed out of existence."

The Pennsylvania Representative said loans to small business would provide "a bulwark against abusive monopoly" and were based upon a "successful technique" developed by the Government.

"Character Loans" Urged

He referred to present Government loans or insurance of loans through the RFC, FHA, Farm Credit Administration and Home Owners Loan Corporation.

Representative Jeffries urged the Senate group to provide a special type of "character loan" of from $500 to $2,500 for established small merchants.

"Most of these merchants have done a wonderful job to survive," Jeffries said. "They have used up their credit. Stocks are deflated. They have lost many customers to larger competitors or centers, and yet they must often carry the local tax loads."

Aides of Mrs. Roosevelt said she would attend for a short time and probably would say a few words. An announcement of the alliance, an organization of relief recipients and unemployed, listde her as a featured speaker. Other speakers listed were Tom Mooney, Mayor Edward J. Kelly, of Chicago, and Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Archbishop Loaned 3 Palace Rooms

Salzburg, Germany, May 31 (AP).—Nazi authorities today permitted Archbishop Sigismund Waitz, the Catholic primate of Germany, to move temporarily into three rooms of the palace from which he found himself dispossessed yesterday upon returning from a trip.

In the rest of the palace, meanwhile, the black-uniformed S. S., or elite guard, in whose name the palace was occupied, have taken charge. Remodeling of the building to make offices for the S. S. already is under way.

British Sovereigns On Eastward Trip

hoped that the people in the communities along the railway line will realize that these appearances which are not in the official itinerary have been due to the gracious kindness of the King and Queen."

King Signalled for Stops

While traveling across Canada's West, the King on several occasions signaled to the engineer to slow down or stop the train when crowds appeared at villages and hamlets to pay their respects to the sovereigns.

The eastward jaunt calls for 19 scheduled stops as against 21 made en route West, but as far as the Canadian part of the North American tour is concerned, Their Majesties already have passed through the largest cities and most pomp. This is confirmed by the official guide book which covers the Western trip with 21 pages of information and commentary, but details the eastward journey with little more than six pages.

Departure of George and Elizabeth from Victoria today was delayed a half hour by a tumultous veterans' demonstration. The former Tommies led 10,000 wildly cheering subjects in the "Auld Lang Syne" and "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" at the dock where Their Majesties were to board the steamer to Vancouver on the mainland.

Meets War Shipmate

Responding to the ovation as they had at Ottawa, the King and Queen mingled and chatted with the former soldiers. One former sailor of the H. M. S. Collingwood exchanged a few memories with the King, for George VI had served on that warship at the Battle of Jutland.

Four Canadian destroyers and three Canadian air force planes convoyed Their Majesties' steamer to Vancouver. They immediately left by auto for New Westminster, where they were acclaimed by 75,000, three times the city's normal population.

Twenty-six welcoming arches had been erected for the British sovereigns, and they rode under each as flower girls scattered blooms before their car. Then they reviewed exercises by 10,000 school children before leaving for Chilliwack for a brief stop.

They are due to arrive in Jasper Park, a mountain retreat, at noon tomorrow.

Plan Training For U. S. Workers

bly the latter two in combination—would appear to be the best bets. New York probably would be too big.

The plan contemplates training on the job, compulsory to large extent. In addition, arrangements would be made with the local educational institutions for voluntary courses for Government personnel.

A large number of Government technicians, such as chemists and other scientists, inspectors, agents, mechanics and the like, not to mention personnel engaged in administrative accounting, would benefit, it is said, by such a training program.

The idea is one of many which the council is working on with a view to strengthening and extending the merit system.

The council has made some recommendations to the Civil Service Commission on the matter of training programs. Its recommendations, in the main, were that it would be necessary to "go slow" with this sort of thing and to introduce it through trial and error.

Recruiting Studied

The council is also studying the question of recruiting personnel. Other matters which it is tackling include efficiency ratings and a satisfactory plan of promotions. It acts only in an advisory capacity, submitting recommendations to the President and the Civil Service Commission.

So far as recruiting is concerned, there is a feeling that there is too mupch "omnibus" recruiting—that is, without directing recruiting through specific lines—and that a good deal has to be done in the way of establishing minimum qualifications for persons for certain jobs.

The work of the council fits in to a certain extent with that of the committee, headed by Justice Reed of the Supreme Court, which is trying to develop a recruiting plan for lawyers, administrators, and certain other higher-bracket technicians.

Presbyterians Call U. S. a Partner of Japan in War

Cleveland, May 31 (AP).—The United States is a "partner with Japan" in the Sino-Japanese conflict, the 151st General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America asserted today at gnal sessions.

Protesting against "continuance of this partnership in aggression," the assembly adopted a resolution urging immediate legislation by Congress to prevent sale of munitions and war materials to Japan.

The assembly of 925 commissioners, dissolving to meet at Rochester, N. Y., May 23, 1940, voted "no action" on proposals to petition President Roosevelt to forego "military demonstrations" during the visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in the United States, and to protest to Prime Minister Chamberlain the proposed creation of an Arab state in Palestine.

Your Figure, Madame!

One Woman Reduces Hips 4½ Inches by Exercise in 3 Months

By Ida Jean Kain.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE it possible to take 4½ inches off the hips without affecting an already perfect bust measurement? That is the remarkable improvement reported by one of the season's most successful reducers.

This reducer, a resident of Ohio, says she only lost 15 pounds. That was all she needed to lose. But, over the three months period she exercised diligently to trim unwanted inches off the hipline, and you can see for yourself the difference this program made in her measurements—in inches.

	BUST	WAIST	HIPS	THIGHS
JANUARY ..	34	28	40	24½
MARCH	34	25½	35½	21

The reducer had the average figure problem—the excess was concentrated below the waistline. Without a careful program of exercise, she might easily have concluded her reducing with a 32-inch bust and 38-inch hips!

Exercise Essential

If you want to trim all your measurements proportionately, you will still have to exercise.

Another successful reducer—this one from Maryland—writes: "Six weeks ago I sent for the Twenty-One Day Diet. Since then I have lost 14 pounds and have taken inches off my measurements—3 off the bust, 3 off the waist, and 2 off the hips. I look and feel so much better that I don't think I'll ever again overeat!

Since the second reducer had good proportions, the diet plus the general exercises were the perfect combination for her.

Any of you who are mostly concerned about getting your weight down will feel encouraged by the good news from a reducer in Michiagn. By following the 1,200 calorie daily menus she has lost 25 pounds in three months, bringing her weight from 160 to 135 pounds, which is normal for her height of 5 feet 5½ inches.

It is a great deal harder to bring the weight to normal than it is to lose 25 pounds when you are considerably more than that overweight. That the Michigan reducer was able to lose at such a satisfactory rate may be partly due to her exercise program. She exercised every day for half an hour.

Analyze Faults

Before you start to work on your figure, do as these three women did: Analyze your figure faults, decide exactly the changes you want to make—and then go ahead! There is no such thing as a figure that is hopeless. Any woman who is willing to work and to deny herself a few calories can be beautifully streamlined.

Baba Sails Voicing Love and Hatred

New York, May 31 (INS).—Princess Baba, of Sarawak, who incurred the displeasure of her wealthy parents, the Maharajah and Maharanee of Sarawak, with her marriage two years ago to Wrestler Bob Gregory, sailed in the S. S. Manhattan today, emphatically voicing her love for Bob and her hatred of Hollywood.

Fashionably gowned, the attractive blonde said she was going to visit her parents in England. Reminded that her dad declared he would not see her until she was quits with Gregory, Baba said:

"I think it will be all right." But she wouldn't declare whether that meant that her marriage was on the rocks or not.

Rockefeller Center Attracts Most Sightseers Among Manhattan's World Fair Visitors

By Alice Hughes.

IT IS ALMOST impossible to plot a tour of the New World's Fair. The place covers more than 1,200 acres and that territory is too tough for any pair of human feet. More over it is a wonderful spectacle and defies any spectator who devotes less than four days to the task of touring it.

However, in order to reach the place, the City of New York itself must be passed, and the metropolis is a show which has taken a century and a half to create, and is well worth anyone's time and effort. The general idea is that Rockefeller Center, with its theaters, its broadcasting stations and its fantastic office buildings, is the mecca which draws the most company, and justly. I never weary of the variegated charms of this place. It has a sunken garden, with excellent restaurants shaded by trees—it has, in fact, practically everything. Any caller to New York who misses it is missing one of the greatest sights in the country.

It is a well-known fact, though somewhat derided, that visitors to a city like New York go to the same places, which are known as tourist-traps. This is a very sound and reasonable idea, the fact being that they go there because such sights are well worth seeing. If they were not, they would go somewhere else.

SUCH PLACES ARE the Aquarium, the Empire State Building with its cloud-piercing tower, Grant's Tomb and the beautiful reach of Riverside Drive. The view from the top of the Empire State Building, 1,200 feet up, never fails to thrill me, and I have probably paid it a dozen visits.

As for the fair itself, New Yorkers are completely sold on it. Many people go time after time and I know one man who has visited 30 buildings, with many still to go. The Amusement Zoo, which is the polite local name for Midway, is now complete and there is fun as well as culture to be had.

As you probably know, admission to the grounds is 75 cents, but once in, many of the exhibits are free. All in all, the cost of the show, from end to end, can be very reasonable and the result is truly tremendous.

One of the nicest features of the fair is the amazing gardens, and if you go for flowers at all you will be delighted by the horticultural display. Holland, for instance, crashed through with a truly astonishing collection of tulips, and the rest of the posies are on an equal scale. I need not add that the buildings themselves are not only modern, but really beautiful. All in all, New York really came through in a very big way and we are truly proud of the result.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Crushed by Brutality of Husband She Loves, Woman Becomes Alcoholic; Friends Ask How to Save Her

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For the past year I have been greatly concerned about a friend of mine, to whom I am devoted. Now in her early thirties, she is a person of rare charm and beauty. She has been married for 17 years and her husband has abused her for years. In February of 1938 he beat her dreadfully, bringing on a most awful nervous breakdown, so that for three months no one thought she would live. She has a wonderful background and comes from the loveliest family. My husband and I feel very close to her, as do her many devoted friends, all of whom have stood by her.

In spite of all the suffering and humiliation her husband has caused her, she claims she still loves him. I do not understand a girl of such character remaining true to such a man. However, they have not lived together since the trouble mentioned, because her firm refuses to keep her if she takes him back. They have one daughter, a precious child now in high school.

Since this trouble, my friend has taken to drinking as an escape. She is too fine a person to let this man ruin her life. She has worked for years, putting all her earnings into a home, and is the most domesticated girl I have ever known. Please tell me what I can do to bring her to her senses. I will indeed be grateful for any suggestions.

MRS. X.

The Person at Fault

DEAR MRS. X.: This gently defenseless friend of yours, whose love thrives upon (or, at least, survives in the face of) abuse, stands in need of assistance of a kind which psychiatry is best qualified to supply. Something is askew within her own personality, or she would not continue ignominiously dependent, emotionally, upon the personality of a man who would so brutally debase her. However, neither psychiatry nor any of its closely related fields of organic and spiritual healing can really help her until she is mentally ready—indeed, eagerly willing—to be helped.

Her pathetic retreat into alcoholism, as an attempted means of evading a problem which can only be solved through intelligent planning and courageous action, is not so much an indictment of her husband as it is of herself. Primarily and essentially, it is a neurotic's reaction to a difficult situation. If everyone took to drink when life belabored him, there would be few sober citizens on the face of the earth.

Her self-perpetuated martyrdom and subsequent alcoholism are all of a piece with her yearning reliance upon her many devoted friends' solicitude, as a never-failing source of compensatory consolation. The whole pattern is indicative of a personality which is consistently failing to make—because, I suppose, it does not know how to make—any well-organized effort to stand on its own feet and solve its own problems in a healthful, commendable way.

It is fairly futile to try to convince her that periodic indulgence in liquor, allegedly as the result of her husband's ill-usage, stands to ruin her life. She probably guesses as much, while at the same time feeling powerless to resist the temptation to drug herself into temporary forgetfulness. No doubt she is becoming, by degrees, so immersed in chronic despair that the turn of future events seems of little consequence to her. She probably reckons, at the time of drinking, that momentary surcease of mental anguish is worth any price she may be required to pay.

If she is to be spared progressive personality disintegration, she must be brought to a realization of the fact that her alcoholism, her marital martyrdom and her unreasoning devotion to her husband despite his cruelty, all stem from neurotic disorders within her own nature; and that her spiritual as well as her social salvation may be achieved by a thoroughgoing housecleaning of a psychoanalytically connected sort.

If there is any alternative to this painstaking, pedestrian experience of self-discovery, as a means of restoring "the center of gravity to the self" (as one psychoanalyst expresses it), it probably lies in "getting religion," as an acquaintance of mine succinctly alludes to the illuminating spiritual experience which reclaimed her from long-standing alcoholism. She maintains, indeed, that this experience, which revolutionized her whole philosophy and conduct of life, cured her alcoholism through erasing those neurotic conflicts, pressures and miseries from which it stemmed.

This woman is affiliated with "Alcoholics Anonymous," an informal fellowship of reformed alcoholics whose remarkable work in personality reconstruction is known to, and respected by, the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene, 1464 Columbia road northwest, telephone ADams 1033. The group has recently published a book, of the same name, which outlines the nature of its quietly altruistic work. The group may be contacted through the medium of the Institute of Mental Hygiene, and the book is available to those who are sincerely interested in the story it has to tell; and the hope it has to offer.

Porch Furniture Is Gay, Light And Waterproof

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

FOR THOSE OF us who don't get around to buying things till we really are ready to use them—and indeed why should we—it's good to hear that new things in summer furniture are still turning up every day. Right now, at the top of the season, the selections are at their best. And here are tidbits of last-minute news:

Iron, in combination with rattan is new and smart. So are iron tables with sand-blasted oak tops. Rattan, with cork, is something to watch, too. Basket weave seats and backs are interesting in reed and wicker; watch also for ribbon-effect lacing, which is flat and practical, and is used in rattan and in metal; twisted cellophane is shown for summer furniture seats and, when varnished, is waterproof. You will also hear about brushed aluminum summer furniture.

Antique green is next to white in popularity of finish for metal furniture. But you will be seeing brown and pewter finishes in high style metal pieces. Rattan is almost always, this year, shown in a pickled pine color.

This is almost the last call for summer furniture—that is, you'd better shop soon if you really want to get a full season's use out of it.

Good Resolutions

(Inspired by the passing show in a hotel lobby.)

When I meet someone by appointment I will not come rushing in gasping for breath and apologizing in loud tones for being late, but will stroll in nonchalantly as if I were bestowing a favor by arriving at all.

When I keep an appointment with a man, I will not immediately upon arrival take charge of the situation and walk away leading with my chin toward the dining room or other destination.

I will not sit down in a tight, short skirt in the most prominent chair, cross my legs and then cast indignant glances at the man who stares at me.

I will never again buy a large-flowered print dress, white shoes, a garden-party hat or a skirt that is too tight in the hips.

I will not sit for long stretches of time glancing about significantly and expectantly and then spend the luncheon hour boasting to my friends about the fresh men who tried to flirt with me.

I will have at least one dark dress in my wardrobe to wear when I am preceeded by bag and baggage.

I will do something—AT ONCE—about my waistline and my hips.

I will buy a cane as soon as I am turned 70 and subdue in the grand manner all underlings who cross my path.

I will enroll in a gym class and learn how to walk and—

One thing above all I will not do—
Let my rear project like a kangaroo.

To defeat she would never confess;
Her foolish ambition but led to the grave—

Today's Health Talk

By Dr. Logan Clendenning

Proper Climate Needed for Vacationing

THE TIME has come to think about vacationing—at least to plan on it. And it has a distinctly medical aspect.

Americans are almost as regular migrators as the birds. Thirty-five million persons, with great regularity, move back and forth across this continent. In jalopies, and trains, and motor cars, and airplanes, driven by whim, fancy or restlessness, this ever-growing flock is on the wing. They spend the "incredible but carefully estimated sum of $5,000,000,000 a year."

The reasons that impel them are not very cogent. Health—either mental or physical; relaxation and renewal of vital forces—would probably be the reason given by most. But medical supervision is seldom intelligently applied to them; indeed, very few physicians would be able to give intelligent advice on the subject, if asked.

Matter of Climate

The inhabitants of all 48 States take part in these migrations, but those of the Midwestern and Northeastern States predominate. This, of course, is largely a matter of climate. The Midwest is too hot for comfort in the summer, the New England States too cold in winter.

The climates sought are seashores, lakeshores, altitudes and deserts. So New England, New York, New Jersey, California, the Great Lake States and New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado are the popular vacation States.

Dr. Charles I. Singer, of Long Beach, N.Y., in the Journal of the American Medical Association, has made a useful classification of climates into the "stimulating" and the "sedative."

The sedative climate is characterized by stability of weather—narrow variations in temperature, or of barometric pressure and humidity, or absence of storms.

The stimulating climate is characterized by wide fluctuations in temperature from day to day, by sudden storms, days of rain alternating with days of sunshine.

Typical Climates

On the whole, on the basis of temperature, the sedative climate is warm, the stimulating climate cool.

The typical sedative climate is California the year round. The typical stimulating climate is Vermont.

But no rule can determine exactly what a stimulating or sedative climate for any one person is. For the New York family the late fall climate of North Carolina will be sedative; for the Florida family it will be stimulating. The New York family finds the summer Maine climate stimulating; the native, after a Maine winter, finds it sedative.

The sedative climate is an excellent medical remedy for those with a constitutional weakness, i. e., for the feeble aged, for the delicate child, for those with debilitating diseases, such as heart disease or chronic kidney or arthritic ailments.

The stimulating climate is better for most of us who are confined during so much of the year, and need not only a mental change but the dash of salt water on our skin and the wind in our faces. "Sleeping under blankets every night" is a postcard message that gives great and proper satisfaction. It is part of the cure.

Witty Talk Wins Friends

A ROOMFUL OF strangers—but Gloria enters confidently. All because she's learned to banish tongue-tied moments with a stock of useful phrases.

Meeting people, she doesn't freeze up after the first "How do you do," but starts conversation bubbling with "Are you an old friend of Anne's, too?" "Such a jolly party, isn't it?"

Not hard to turn strangers into friends if you show your interest in them, in what they're saying, with gracious phrases—"I'm glad to hear you say that." "I'd love to hear about it."

And how people warm to the girl who knows how to be appreciative. To the young man who brings you a chair, say "That was kind of you." To the acquaintance who invites you to her party, "How sweet of you to ask me."

The right remark so often is the finishing touch that binds a friendship, wins success in a business talk. When the new acquaintance telephones, say "It was so nice of you to call me." To the friend whose husband has won a fine job, "He deserves it—and we're so glad." On ending a business call, say pleasantly, "Thank you for the interview."

And at all times you appear your best, most entertaining self with the help of sparkling, colorful phrases: "It's a nine days wonder." "She catches at straws." "He's the pink of politeness."

Easy to make new friendships, further old ones when you have good phrases on tap. Our 40-page booklet, 1500 USEFUL PHRASES, helps you talk confidently, effectively on social and business occasions. Has lists of lively word combinations that give vividness to your vocabulary, make you good company.

Secret of Beauty Is to Relax, Says Actress

Hollywood, Calif.—Olivia de Havilland, movie actress, says relaxation is the most important beauty hint she knows.

The young star of a dozen period pictures has learned to "untense" several times a day, regardless of what she is doing. She walks, does deep breathing exercises, or falls limp in a chair while a phonograph plays soft music.

After a day's work she does not touch her dinner until nerves are completely "at ease." The first step is a leisurely tub bath into which she tosses a handful of sea salt and another of perfumed bath salts. While relaxing in the tub she sips hot milk from a big mug.

Mrs. Roosevelt Puts Cotton On the Map at Party for Press

Wears Dress of Southern Fabric At Behest of Secretary Wallace, Whose Wife Is Similarly Garbed

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

BY SPECIAL REQUEST of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mrs. Roosevelt wore a cotton dress last evening when she and the President entertained at their annual White House dance for the Fourth Estate.

It seems Secretary Wallace thought all this business of the First Lady's wearing a British wool frock to meet Their Majesties might well be balanced with some plain and fancy publicity on a home-grown dress material. He mentioned the matter to Mrs. Roosevelt; so when the 1,700 guests flocked to last night's party, they saw their hostess trimly turned out in a frock of yellow, beige and brown blocked, unbleached cotton, made with a fitted bodice, a short jacket and flaring skirt—very American looking, and very becoming.

Mrs. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, was there in a cotton dress, too, as would be expected; but late yesterday it looked as if she might not have one to wear. Her outfit—an organdy print of vivid flower designs on a black background—arrived by plane from New York only a few hours before the dance. And—possibly setting a brand-new style note—she had on stockings of beige colored cotton!

Several members of the Cabinet were in last evening's company mingling with the other guests; but Vice President and Mrs. Garner, who in early New Deal days always put in an appearance at the Fourth Estate dance, were among those missing. Not even for the press, it seems, will the Vice President stay up past his regular bedtime.

The President, though present at the dinner preceding the ball, was not able to receive the guests arriving later for the dance itself, but retired early from the scene because of a slight fever. Mrs. Roosveelt took over his job as well as her own in greeting members of the Fourth Estate.

A fling at the Virginia Reel, with Mrs. Roosevelt the star performer, enlivened the early part of the dance, and before the evening was over several groups of guests took a few turns at the Chestnut Tree and the Glamour Glide.

Joe Moss Plays For Dancing

If the Weather Man hadn't cooperated, the spacious East Room, where Joe Moss' Orchestra flourished from 9 o'clock on, might have been too jammed for dancing. As it was, however, the crowd cheerfully overflowed to the cool east terrace and to the front lawn, where strings of colored lights lent an additional festive note to the scene, and dancing went merrily along until well after midnight.

As usual at these parties, which have been given every year during the Roosevelt regime, tables last night were set up in the foyer and beer was served continuously. Professional entertainers of the type generally brought in for White House functions were missing, but not missed; and an air of informality keynoted the event from first to last.

Time and time again, Joe Moss and his orchestra came through with such popular melodies as "Home on the Range," "Anchors Aweigh," "My Wild Irish Rose" and "The Halls of Montezuma."

Buffet Supper At Midnight

Supper served buffet style at midnight climaxed the party, but did not end it.

In keeping with their custom, President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertained heads of press organizations and their wives, husbands or escorts, at dinner before the dance. A number of other parties also served as pleasant preludes to the White House press party.

Celebrating Secretary Woodring's 49th birthday, he and Mrs. Woodring entertained a number of their newspaper friends at a cocktail party and buffet supper in their apartment at the Shoreham Hotel. Among those in the company were Mr. and Mrs. Jay Hayden, Mr. and Mrs. Duke Shoop, Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Miller, Mr and Mrs. Fulton Lewis, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Harold Brayman, Miss Martha Strayer, Miss Ruby Black and Herbert Little, Miss Ruth Jones, Mrs. Frederic Henney, Miss Evelyn Peyton Gordon, and a number of others taking place in Miss Johnson's and Mrs. Bulkley Griffin entertained at cocktails, their party taking place in Miss Jonson's apartment at 3000 Connecticut avenue. Their guests included Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Essary, Mr. and Mrs. John O'Donnell, Mr. and Mrs. John O. Herrick, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Stokes, Robert S. Allen and his wife, Miss Ruth Finney, Bulkley Griffin, Mrs. Elizabeth May Craig, Mr and Mrs. Turner Catledge, Mr. and Mrs. Rod Southwick and several others.

Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Canham entertained at dinner before the dance; and still another dinner was the one given by Miss Eileen O'aniel, who had among her guests Miss Celeste Page, Henry Erlich and Henry Dwight Whitney.

The Roosevelts Give Dinner

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertained at a small dinner last night preceding the dance they gave in honor of members of the press. The Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau and the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace were ranking guests.

Others present were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen T. Early, Raymond Clapper, president of the Gridiron Club, and Mrs. Clapper; Arthur Hachten, president of the Men's National Press Club, and Mrs. Hachten; Earl Godwin, president of the White House Correspondents Association, and Mrs. Godwin; Dr. and Mrs. Clarence Lee Miller, the latter of whom is president of the Women's National Press Club; Mrs. Louis McHenry Howe, Hartley Howe, William D. Hassett, Miss Marguerite LeHand and Gerald Morgan.

Miss Avietenaite, of Lithuania, Proves Attractive Honor Guest at Tea Party

USUALLY THE GUEST of honor at a tea is left to talk in the living room with the host and hostess while all the other guests herd into the dining room. But yesterday at the party given in her honor by the Lithuanian Minister and Mme. Zadeikis, Miss Marguerite Avietenaite, their countrywoman and the only woman commissioner general to the World's Fair, was constantly surrounded by people who wanted to know how she did it.

Lithuania would seem to be the answer to a feminist's prayer, judging by what Miss Avietenaite had to say about it yesterday. Second in command at the Lithuanian pavilion at the fair is a woman, and there has also been a woman vice president of the Lithuanian Parliament. In the press section of the foreign office in Lithuania, of which she is head, there is a large percentage of workers on the distaff side.

LIKE MME. ZADEIKIS, Miss Avietenaite was born in the United States and then went back to Lithuania when that country issued a call after the war to former countrymen to come back and help with the rehabilitation. She has her M. A. from the University of Geneva and originally started out to be a journalist. Her first job was as secretary to the Lithuanian minister of foreign affairs. She has to sail back to Europe June 10 to her foreign office duties.

Miss Avietenaite is pleasant and friendly, though she admits that at moments she feels a bit shy of the American press ever since a New York reporter wrote that she loved to "sling slang." She says she is interested in our slang, as in everything American, but doesn't "sling" it.

THE CENTERPIECE of the tea table yesterday looked from a distance like an enormous plate of vanilla ice cream with a border of strawberry. It turned out to be masses of white carnations surrounded with rows of pale pink roses.

The Minister's little daughter had loaned a Lithuanian doll for the occasion, which stood in the hall next to a bowl of water lilies. The doll was in Lithuanian national costume.

A guest who was almost as much a center of attention as Miss Avietenaite was Miss Vakeel, an Indian who wore a beautiful native dress of rose silk with an embroidered border.

ALSO AMONG the guests were: The Finnish Minister, Dr. Hjalmar Procope, in earnest conversation with the Latvian Minister, Dr. Bilmanis, on a sofa in the hall . . . Mrs. Lyo Henderson and Mrs. Edward Page from State Department ranks—their husbands were formerly stationed in Russia . . . Mrs. and Mrs. Thomas Burke . . . Mrs. J. Pierrepont Moffat, in a cool-looking blue and white print . . . Senator and Mrs. William King.

OTHERS were Dr. and Senora de Fuentes, of the Mexican embassy; Michal Budny, the Polish Second Secretary . . . many members of the Red Cross and the National Geographic Magazine staff among the latter group Miss Helen Covey, associate editor of its weekly magazine . . . M. and Mme. Molekamp of the Netherlands legation . . . pretty Mrs. McKenney Mallan . . . the Portuguese Minister and Mme. Bianchi and Miss Sibilla Skidelsky, who wore a very good-looking dress, a rose top over a navy blue skirt . . . the Counselor of the Czech legation and Mme. Brejska . . . and dozens of others.

Federation Awards Art, Literature Prizes

Mrs. George Dalwick, Mrs. Jessie Lutton And Mrs. Elsie Erwin Are Winners; Officers, Chairmen and Presidents Report

By Jesse Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Prizes in art, poetry and literature were announced last night at the closing session of the annual meeting of the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs, at the Roosevelt Hotel. The prize awards were part of the evening program, climaxing a day of reports by officers and committee chairmen of the federation and president of the affiliated clubs.

Mrs. Miles C. Trowbridge is chairman of the department of fine arts under which the division awards were made. Mrs. D. S. Davis, chairman of the division of poetry, announced Mrs. George Dalwick, of the Park View Women's Club, as winner in this division on her poem, "The World Speaks." The judges were Murray Marshall, Will Chandlee and Earl Cuevas.

Mrs. George McCullough, chairman of literature, announced Mrs. Jessie N. Lutton as winner of first prize on her "Reflection, or the Story of the Looking Glass," and Mrs. E. Morgan Pryse, president of the Marietta Park Woman's Club, second on her story, "The Woman and the Wolves." Judges in this contest were Dr. Bartlett Burleigh James, Mrs. Bessie R. Wilson and Mrs. Sylvia Ziskind.

Park View Club Wins Honor

A second honor went to the Park View Club with the award of the Benny Art Fund prize to Mrs. Elsie Erwin. Her picture was of a yellow chrysanthemum in a vase with brown oak leaves. The Columbia Heights Art Club, which contributed the most to the fund in proportion to its membership, will be given the prize-winning picture, which is purchased from the fund. It has had the support of 19 clubs.

First honorable mention went to a picture of roses by Mrs. Anna Goodhart Howland, of the Women's City Club, and second to pink peonies in an alabaster bowl, by Mrs. Trowbridge, who is a member of the Entre Nous Club.

Judges were Mrs. Mathilde M. Leisenring, Eugen Weise and A. H. O. Rolle. Arrangements have been made for an exhibit through November at the museum at Tenth street and Constitution avenue.

The art division presented the speaker last night also, Robert L. Parsons, assistant to the director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, who gave an illustrated lecture on "Contemporary American Artists."

Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers provided incidental music for the program which was opened with a memorial service in which the club presidents participated, led by Mrs. John Frizzell and Mrs. Ellis Logan. There were also piano solos by Mrs. F. F. Elliott and soprano solos by Miss Phebe Stine, accompanied by Mrs. Fred Knoblock.

Mrs. Minnie Frost Rand, chairman of the division of drama, presented a group of girls in dramatic sketches at the close of the evening. In the cast were Dorothy Ann Yockey, Phillis Rand, Miriam Burkowitz, Frances Shiflet and Audrey Rand.

Talked for Suffrage At Convention

The campaign for District Suffrage received impetus at the recent meeting of the council of the General Federation of Women's Clubs in San Francisco, according to the report of Miss Elaine Eppley, chairman of the committee on District representation, read by Mrs. VeLerne Beales, first vice president of the District. Both Mrs. Beales and Mrs. Wiley distributed literature prepared by the citizens' joint committee and both spoke to the clubwomen on District suffrage, and found the response favorable.

Miss Etta L. Taggart, reporting as president of the 25 Club, newly affiliated with the District Federation, declared that its members "view with disappointment and alarm the tendency of Congress to rush through the enactment of legislation for the District without affording the voteless and unrepresented residents full and sympathetic hearing. Much of this legislation affects welfare needs, she said, and she urged that the federation petition the House and Senate to give both individuals and organizations opportunity for adequate hearing.

Miss Taggart also read the child welfare report of Mrs. J. J. Staley, chairman of that division under the department of public welfare which is headed by Mrs. Horace J. Phelps. Recommendations were made for more case workers, an increased budget, a physchiatric and physiological department; that children not be sent to the receiving home; that girls' clubs be organized and special attention be given children of premature birth

Dr. Edith Seville Coale reported as chairman of the cancer control committee, reviewing the work of the Women's Field Army of which Mrs. Lloyd Biddle, past president of the Federation, is commander for the District and Mrs Charles P. Keyser, president of the Entre Nouse Club, vice-commander. Mrs. Biddle reported as director to the General Federation.

Mrs. Lloyd A. Morrison reported as chairman of the department of American citizenship, under which the committee on national representation serves. Other reports in her department were those of Mrs. Grattan Kerans, Americanization; Mrs. Eugene E. Thompson, patriotism; Mrs. Leo Kasehagen, law observance; Mrs. Henry Van Arsdale, war veterans.

American Home Chairman Reports

Mrs. Norman E. McIndoo, chairman of the American home department, gave the report on the work of all of the divisions and committees working under her. Mrs. Charles H. Pierce, vice chairman of the department of education, read the report of Mrs. Arthur C. Watkins, the chairman.

Reports in the department of fine arts included, in addition to those on poetry, literature and drama, that of Mrs. Ellis Logan, chairman of the Bible committee, and Mrs. Hazel Brown Piers, who has provided the musical programs for the club throughout the year.

Mrs. George O. Gillingham reported as chairman of international relations; Mrs. John T. Lucker, as chairman of the department of junior club women; Mrs. Ernest William Howard, chairman of the department of legislation; Mrs. Thomas H. Faris, press and publicity.

Miss Olesen Resigns A. A. U. W. Presidency

Announces Retirement Because She Is Moving to N. Y.; Reports Presented At Annual Meeting of University Women

The Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women, which has carried on the past year's successful program under the presidency of Mrs. Robert Olesen, last night heard reports of officers and committee chairmen at its annual meeting. Mrs. Olesen's announcement that, because of moving to New York, where Dr. Olesen has been transferred as chief quarantine officer of the Port of New York, she had given her resignation to the board, was received with universal regret. At the board's request, she has agreed to hold the office until the fall season opens and will represent the branch at the national convention of the association in Denver this month.

The reports reflected the great variety of interests of the university women during the year. One of the committees which has done notable work is that on the legal status of women under the chairmanship of Miss Bertha Nienburg. This year it has investigated nursing as a field for college women and has made a survey both of the local need for nurses and for a nurses' training school. Last season it investigated the home economics field in relation to positions for college women as managers of tea rooms and restaurants.

Legislative Committee Has Been Active

The legislative committee of which Mrs. Eugene Callaghan is chairman, has studied legislation brought to its attention by other committees and called on members of the association who are authorities in special fields for opinions on which to base its conclusions. It has continued its opposition to the sales tax while some other groups have lagged in their interest in it. After a study of local reorganization, said Mrs. Callaghan, the committee recommended an independent school board and library board.

The education committee, for which Miss Elsie Green reported as chairman, is continuing its cooperation with the League of Women Voters in a study of the function of the school board and is working on the Reeves report in an effort to develop a school code which might be substituted for the plan proposed in the re-organization bill.

The social studies committee, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Charter Heslep, has devoted much study to the Kepecs report and in several projects it has cooperated with the League of Women Voters. There have also been study groups, one on constitutional problems, conducted by Mrs. Charlotte Hankin, and another on consumer research, by Mrs. Robert Burgess.

Creative Work Stressed Under Arts

The arts committee, the chairman, Mrs. Parker Trask reported, has tried to encourage creative work in all departments. The poetry study group under Miss Ruth Evelyn Henderson, has studied and translated Chinese poetry; the creative writing group has worked under Mrs. Earl Trager; the classical letter writers group, under Mrs. A. S. McDaniel; the music appreciation group, conducted by Miss Evgenia Botkin, has grown from a membership of 3 to 35; the group studying art in Washington, under Miss Louise Newell, has devoted itself to study of public buildings of the Capital, and the applied art group, under Dr. Edith Allen, has led the way for the inclusion of handicrafts in the national A. A. U. W. program.

Miss Jacqueline Pringle reported as chairman of the players' group with its 30 members who will read plays this summer as last; Miss Myrl Rhine, as chairman of publicity; Mrs. Lawrence Radford as chariman of membership, and Mrs. Frank S. Smith, chairman of hospitality.

The annual meeting was preceded by a membership tea in the afternoon. Mrs. Radford and her committee presented an entertaining skit and there were songs by Miss Floreine Hurley, accompanied by Miss Catherine Murray and piano numbers by Rae Alice Ebner.

Make Pictures Out of Your Mirrors says "Mary Annette" Decorating Hostess of The Hecht Co.

Have you ever thought of hanging your mirrors so that they will pick up and reflect an attractive corner of the room, or a vista from the garden? Try it—you will delight in the effect. It will not only make your room appear larger, give it more depth, but will add greatly to its charm. The days when pictures and mirrors were hung way above one's vision are past, thanks be! Today's trend of bringing both pictures and mirrors down so that one may really enjoy a picture, and get full benefit of the mirror makes sense, besides being so much more effective. Now—don't forget my suggestion, and the next time you hang a mirror, place it so that it will give back a picture.

Sea at Calmest As Divers Place Chains on Squalus

By the Associated Press.

Portsmouth, N. H., May 31.—Salvage operations at the North Atlantic grave of the submarine Squalus proceeded today under the calmest seas since the submersible carried 26 men to their deaths eight days ago.

With an air hose already attached to the water-free control room from which 33 survivors were saved, divers worked in icy waters 240 feet below the surface in efforts to attach chains to the sturdy propeller struts.

Rear Admiral Cyrus W. Cole, commandant of the Portsmouth Navy Yard and director of salvage work, said the divers were proceeding cautiously and that he did not think the submersible would be raised for at least two weeks.

E. J. Gray Trial Is Under Way At Rockville

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST. 9213 Clark Ave., Silver Spring, Md. Telephone SHepherd 4200.

Trial of Edwin J. Gray, former Montgomery County building inspector and civic leader of Edgemoor, got under way yesterday in Montgomery County Circuit Court at Rockville, Md.

State's Attorney Benjamin G. Wilkinson, jr., declared the State was ready to prove that Gray had falsified his records to embezzle county money paid to him for permits.

Defense Attorneys Albert M. Boulc, Vivian V. Simpson, Joseph B. Simpson, jr., and Kenneth Lyddane indicated in their opening statements that the defense would point out that all money has been paid to the county that is due from his office and that their auditors had discovered an error in his account in his favor, existence of which neither Gray nor the bank knew. The defense will argue that Gray overpaid the county between $200 and $300 while he was building inspector.

8,000 Dance As June Week Nears Close

Middies' Exercises Climaxed by Ball; Prizes Awarded; Graduation Today

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, May 31.—June week's annual glamour ended tonight when 4,000 couples crowded Dahlgren Hall in farewell to 578 midshipmen who will graduate into the Navy tomorrow.

In the huge, flag-decked hall to music that marched hauntingly over the Severn River, the June ball climaxed six days of formal parades, drills, dances and memorial services.

The dance, largest of the year at the Naval Academy, drew the entire regiment of midshipmen. Plebes, to embark Friday on their first high seas cruise, were permitted to attend an academy ball for the first time.

The great hall was packed with civilians, naval officers, midshipmen and their "drags" in formal attire. "Smoke Park," the lawn back of Bancroft Hall, was arranged as an open-air lounge to care for the overflow from the hall.

Graduation Today

June Week will conclude tomorrow when the 578 graduates, led by Louis H. Roddis, jr., the St. Paul (Minn.) midshipman who won top scholastic honors, receive their diplomas.

Admiral William D. Leahy, chief of naval operations and lately named Governor General of Puerto Rico, will be the chief speaker at the graduation exercises, to be held in the open air in Thompson Stadium for the first time in a quarter century.

Graduation services start at 11 a. m. with the invocation by Chaplain W. N. Thomas.

Rear Admiral Wilson Brown, Academy superintendent, will introduce Admiral Leahy, who will distribute diplomas at the conclusion of his address. Admiral Brown will confer the bachelor of science degrees on the graduating midshipmen.

Will Sing Navy Song

The midshipmen will sing one verse of "Navy Blue and Gold," the Academy alma mater song, and "The Star-Spangled Banner" will conclude the ceremonial.

Traditionally the remaining undergraduates cheer the graduating class, and the graduates cheer the remaining midshipmen, after which the graduates hurl their midshipmen's caps away, to replace them with naval officers' caps. There is always a wild scramble to obtain one of the caps.

Plebes, after graduation, celebrate their new status as third classmen by staging a snake dance in Lovers' Lane, a custom almost as old as the Academy.

Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor will be among thte dignitarie grouped on the rostrum during the graduation exercises.

Prizes Awarded

The Naval Academy honored its outstanding midshipmen this afternoon at a formal parade of the regiment on Worden Field when prizes and awards were distributed by Admiral Brown.

Midshipman Roddis carried off the lion's share of the awards, taking nine prizes for scholastic excellence. Included in his trophies were binoculars, watches, swords, a sextant and a spyglass.

Article on Spoils System Assails Political Machines

Seventeen-year-old Marie-Louise Ralph, of Roosevelt High School, last night was announced the winner of an essay contest on "The Merit System Versus the Spoils System," sponsored by the National Federation of Federal Employes. The prize was $25.

Second prize of $15 went to Josephine Cless, 17, of the Academy of the Holy Cross. Awards of $5 each were won by Margaret Mary Smith, 17, of Georgetown Visitation Convent; Anna Mae O'Brien, 18, of Holy Trinity High School; Mary Sheila Corbett, 17, of Sacred Heart Academy; Frances Kennard, 16, of Roosevelt High, and Margaret Mary Johnson, 17, of Georgetown Visitation Convent.

In the first essay contest she ever won, Miss Ralph struck at the spoils system in this way:

"Partisan political machines are not interested in natinoal issues. To them votes signify power and power makes control, tolerated only as long as jobs are promised to faithful supporters possible. This control is responsible for boss rule and machine-ridden communities. In order to create more plums for the political pie, the spoilsman creates as many jobs as possible, increasing the already heavy burden on the taxpayer . . . An enlightened public, aroused, can destroy the last vestiges of the spoils doctrine."

Miss Cless observed that "everyday the burdens and responsibilities of the Federal Government is increasing. Is it not inconsistent with our principles of sound judgment to entrust the fulfillment of sacred obligations to an incompetent personnel? . . . The best remedy to the spoils system is a civil service reform and that reform can be accomplished only through Federal legislation. It is, therefore, the taxpayers' responsibility to see that men imbued with the ideals and principles of a much-needed civil service reform be elected to office."

The judges were Senator Bulow, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, and Harry B. Mitchell of the Civil Service Commission.

Md. Lower Judiciary Reform Bill Goes Into Effect Today

Maryland's lower judiciary reform law, revamping the ancient justice of the peace system, goes into effect throughout the State today.

Gov. O'Conor yesterday issued an incomplete list of trial magistrates named under the new law, the Associated Press reported. Included in the list are five magistrates for Montgomery and Prince Georges counties.

The Montgomery County appointees are Donald A. De Lashmutt, of Rockville; James C. Christopher, of Bethesda, and Ralph G. Shure, of Takoma Park. Those named in Prince Georges are Alan Bowie, of Brandywine, and Walter L. Green, of College Park.

De Lashmutt has been serving as county police court judge under the old judiciary system since May 1. He held the same office from 1932 to 1935.

Christopher is a former deputy clerk to the county commissioners and a former law associate of Judge Stedman Prescott, before the latter was named to the Circuit Court bench. Shure, a practicing attorney in Takoma Park, is a graduate of the University of Maryland and Georgetown University law school.

Bowie is a former Prince Georges County State's attorney. Like De Lashmutt, he has been serving as police court judge since May 1 under the old judiciary system. Green is a practicing attorney at Hyattsville and has been active in Democratic politics for a number of years. This is his first public office.

Under the new judiciary system, the justices of the peace are classed as trial and committing magistrates. The authority of the latter is limited to setting bond and holding prisoners for trail before the trial magistrates.

Other trial magistrates named by the Governor yesterday, according to the Associated Press, are:

Allegany County—Oliver H. Bruce, jr.; Frank A. Pardee, both of Cumberland; Owen L. Porter, Joseph A. Feldman, Frostburg; Edward S. Moran, Westernport; Bernard F. McPartland, Lonaconing; Aloysius Monahan, Mount Savage; Thomas E. Stakem, Midland; Roy S. Bowman, Cresaptown; James T. Logsdon, Barton. One substitute magistrate not named.

Baltimore County—John B. Rowe, Catonsville; J. Frederick C. Offutt, Cockeysville; Michael J. Birmingham, Essex; Clarence G. Luken, Fullerton; Charles H. Doing, Halethorpe; W. Evans Anderson, Parkton; Charles A. Webb, Pikesville; Frances Scott Rhodes, Reisterstown; Thomas F. McDonough, Sparrows Point; Milton R. Smith, Towson. One substitute, three regular magistrates not named.

Calvert County—William W. Duke, Prince Frederick. Two unnamed.

Dorchester County—J. Richard Jones, Cambridge; George W. James, substitute, Cambridge.

Wicomico County: E. Sheldon Jones, Salisbury. Substitute unnamed.

Petitions Filed to Force Popular Vote On Conservation, Coroner Reforms

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, May 31.—Referendum petitions to stay the provisions of six laws passed by the last Legislature were filed with the secretary of state's office today.

If the petitions contain the requisite number of signatures of qualified voters, and are adjudged legally correct in form, the six laws will be prevented from taking effect until after the people of the State have voted on the bills in the 1940 elections.

Heading the list of petitions to halt approved laws was the request for referendum on the bill providing reorganization of the State conservation commission by creating separate departments to handle marine fisheries and upland game.

Aimed at Coroner Law

Another administration bill faced the referendum gauntlet when a petition to halt the operation of the coroners' reform law was received. The petition seeks to prevent replacement of the coroners' system with a medical examiner in each county.

A petition to halt the occupational diseases bill, making 34 diseases compensable under the State industrial accident laws, was not received.

The Maryland and District of Columbia Industrial Union Council, which had sponsored petitions to block the measure, announced tonight it had decided not to seek a referendum on the bill.

The bill abolishing minority representation on the State industrial accident commission and cutting its membership to four was also attacked.

Names to Be Checked

The St. Marys County measure providing for transportation of parochial school children was hit by another petition.

Two Washington County bills, one authorizing a $400,000 courthouse bond issue, and another relating to unlawful acts by county officials, were halted by the petitions filed today.

Names on all the petitions will be immediately checked, and the text of the petitions submitted to the attorney general's office for legal sufficiency. If correct, the six measures will go on the 1940 ballot.

By Bill Burnett.

Dick (Rosy) Rozzelle, Central High's 125-pound package of pitching courage, saved his best effort of the season for his school's final and most crucial game of the season yesterday at Griffith Stadium. The tiny right-hander pitched four-hit ball to give the "Gas House Gang" of interhigh baseball its first city public school championship since 1936, beating Eastern's defending champions, 6 to 2.

For Eastern it was an unsuccessful shot at its third interhigh title in a row. About 1,000 fans, by far the largest schoolboy baseball gathering of the year, sat in on Rozzelle's supperlative work and left the park satisfied that Central was the best team.

Rally to Score

Despite its four-run margin, Central was forced to come back strongly to win. Eastern jumped into a 2-to-0 lead in its half of the first period, and for the next three innings it clung to its advantage.

A pair of Blue runs, both unearned as were Eastern's opening tallies, knotted the count in the fifth, and in the eighth Central jumped on "Puddin" Lovett for two of its four winning runs.

Until that disastrous eighth, Lovett remained in fair control of the situation, though he gave up five hits and had three men on base in the second, two in the fourth, and one in the seventh. A collapse on Eastern's part, and a corresponding awakening on the part of the Centralites, put the game on ice.

Len Sokol led off with a base on balls, got to second on Lovett's wild heave to first and came in on "Zip" Zimmerman's single to right. The later went to second on Cole's attempt to cut Sokol off at the plate, and stole third base immediately afterward. That, incidentally, was his third stolen base of the game.

Sam DiBlasi, Central's third sacker, followed Zimmerman to the plate, drew a base on balls, and there followed one of the neatest plays of the interhigh series. Di Blasi unconcernedly cantered toward second with Lovett watching every move of his and Zimmerman's, on third. When he was ten feet from the base, Lovett gave up his watch on "Zip," threw to second, but was too late—Zimmerman stole home for his fourth theft.

Next Two Were Earned

The other two tallies in the inning were slightly less spectacular, though earned. Rozzelle, who had three of Central's eight hits, had his third single then, scoring Di Blasi, Fenlon got on through Hallama's error, Bransdorf walked, and Zello Lagos rapped a sharp single to right to score Rozzelle. That was the end of the scoring, and the end of Eastern's title chances.

If errors hurt the real baseball display, they did nothing to damage the exciting action. Central made three and Eastern chipped in with five. The most surprising angle of the game was the hitlessness of Benny Steiner, who went into the clash with a record of .391 in six games. He was up five times and got on base only once, in the fifth, on John Stasulli's misplay.

Warren Earhardt, who took the place of Lovett in the eighth after DiBlasi had drawn his charity base, was touched for two hits and a walk in his stint, but turned in three strikeouts. He fanned the last two men to face him in the ninth. The only Tide batsman who mangaed to solve Rozzell's steady, brainy firing, were Tom Reino and Paul Cohill. Each had a brace of safeties.

Marvel Ratings To Pick Winners At Delaware Park

After picking five winners in the eight races yesterday at the Charles Town race track, the Marvel Ratings, published exclusively in The Post, will also be applied to Delaware Park entries beginning tomorrow.

In addition to picking the daily double winners at Charles Town yesterday, the Marvel Ratings picked the one-two finishers in the sixth race.

The ratings picked the first race winner, Boro Poker, which paid a $4.40 mutuel. The second and third race winners, Adriatic and Counora, were picked by the ratings and paid a double of $29.40, in addition to mutuels of $13.40 and $3.60.

In the sixth race, Marvel Ratings gave Timber Lady, 323, and Enthusiasm, 322. The finish was a photo affair, with Timber Lady winning by a matter of half an inch, to pay $17 straight money. The fifth winner picked by Marvel Ratings was Top Shell, in the seventh, which paid $7.20 to win.

Rozzelle an All-Around Hero as Central Wins High Title

It didn't take the crowd and Central's ball team long to decide who was the hero yesterday in the Mount Pleasanters' 6-to-2 whipping of Eastern, the defending champion, for the public school diamond championship. Dick Rozzelle, diminutive right-hand pitcher (above), was hoisted to the shoulders of admirers and carried to the dressing room. He allowed but four hits, but his activity didn't stop there. He had three hits in four times. In the lower photo he slides unsuccessfully into home as he tried to break a 2-2 deadlock in the seventh. Paul Cohill took a throw from Cooksey and tagged him out

Goodall Golf Play Starts Today in N. Y.

Combined Features Of Match, Medal Play In Round-Robin Event

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—The $5,000 Goodall Round-Robin, a golf tournament which combines features of match and medal play and doesn't exactly fit into either category, will get under way tomorrow over the testing Fresh Meadow C. C. course with a field of hand-picked stars.

It's not really a match play tournament because each man plays out each of his seven 18-hole rounds, as in medal play. Yet it's not actually medal play, because a man's standing is determined not by his score but by the number of holes he has won and lost in his threesome matches. Whatever you chose t call it, it shuld be an ideal tournament for the spectators.

Benefits Spectators

For one third, each day the five threesomes will tee off at 5-minute intervals. That means a fairly agile galleryite can run up and down the course and keep track of what's going on in each of the matches. A less ambitious spectator can pick out a vantage spot and have the whole field go by him inside of half an hour.

As another advantage, there'll be no question of following a player for five or six holes only to discover suddenly that he's out of the running. All 15 of them will be in this from start to finish. As proof of the fact that no man is out until he's in, there's Sam Snead, who was at the bottom of the list at the end of the first round last year, and yet wound up taking down top money of $1,000 after a tie and playoff with Gene Sarazen.

Pairings to Be Shifted

For a clincher, there's the fact that 14 of the contestants will be using this tournament as a final chance to tune up their shots for next week's National Open championship. This applies to all but Walter Hagen, who failed to qualify.

"The Haig," who has accounted for 7 of the 18 national championships credited to this field, has been

Max Baer, Lou Nova Fight in N. Y. Tonight

By Sid Feder,

Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, May 31.—Lured on by a shot at the heavyweight championship "big money," Max Baer, the reformed playboy, and Lou Nova, a determined young former collegian, fight it out for 15 rounds or less in Yankee Stadium's ring tomorrow night.

Before a crowd expected to reach 40,000 and contribute to a gross gate of $100,000 or more, the two California "family men" climb into the ring at 9 p. m. (Eastern standard time) at about even money in the betting.

The clash shapes up as one of the closest headline heavyweight fights —on paper—in years. For each of the punch-tossers it is his most important fight.

Baer, serious in training and purpose for the first time, hopes to become the first man in boxing history to win back the heavyweight championship. He is confident, he can knock out his fellow-Californian in six rounds or less. Nova, who has skyrocketed to prominence in heavyweight circles in less than two years, is equally convinced he can get by Baer and then go on to take the title just as easily. "In fact," he says, "I will be disappointed if I don't kayo Maxie."

Since Promoter Jacobs has promised the victor a September shot at the winner of the June 28 title go between Joe Louis and Tony Galento, the principals in tomorrow night's tea party are playing for lots higher stakes than just a cut of the gate.

Serious in Training

For the first time in his colorful madcap whirl through the fistic world, Baer has convinced the boys of his new determination. The only question mark now is whether his reformation has come too late.

This corner believes it has. From his six weeks of training routine at Ferndale, N. Y., Max has come with all his usual excellent physical equipment. He still has a physique finer than any other man in the ring. He still carries sleep-making medicine in his right hand and has added hard left hook. But Maxie still likes to clown around the ring, and he'll walk in there tomorrow night on 30-year-old legs.

So this department believes that unless he can polish the strong, young former footballer in half a dozen rounds or less—and that is doubtful—Max will lose—or rather, Maxie's legs will lose for him.

Nova Fast, Sturdy

Nova, on the other hand, is a fast moving, sturdy blonde belter, definitely a difficult target for Maxie's roundhouse rights. He throws lots of punches, and likes to come in close and mix it, which doesn't argue well for Maxie's right-hand shots. Baer needs plenty of swinging room.

At his fantastic training base among the apes, elephants, lions and tigers at a Yogi center near Nyack, N. Y., Nova has given his sparring mates plenty, has shown a fast left hand, a "cute" right hand chop and a body attack which won't please Maxie a little bit. And, on top of all that, his legs are six younger than Baer's.

Burial of Mike Thompson, Grid Official, Set for Saturday

By the Associated Press.

Emmitsburg, Md., May 31.—Mike Thompson, sports official beloved of players and spectators, will be buried in the cemetery of the church he attended after a requiem high mass Saturday morning.

The Rev. Hulwett V. Piper, assistant pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, will celebrate the mass at the church at 10 a. m.

Michael J. Thompson he was christened, but to players all over the country he was "mike." Dean of football officials, he refereed his first game in 1897 and was paid $5 for it. Since then he has officiated at major games throughout the country.

Brief Athletic Career

His own athletic career was brief. Physicians warned him his leg, twice broken in school baseball games, might not stand the heavy work of further competition and he gave up playing for coaching.

At the time of his death early today he was Burgess (Mayor) of Emmitsburg, coach of the Baltimore Fire Department football team, operator of a hotel, editor of a weekly paper and a correspondent for the Associated Press.

One of his last acts was to cover the Mount St. Mary's-Frostburg Teachers College baseball game. His telegram to the Associated Press was finished at 8:04 p. m. Five hours later he was dead, stricken by a heart attack, his fourth in two years.

He held a master of arts degree fro mtwo colleges and had taught

Redskins Sign Bo Russell, Of Auburn

The Washington Redskins yesterday signed their twelfth new college football star for the 1939 season—Bo Russell, 202-pound tackle last year at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala.

Russell, who will be graduated from Auburn in June, was choosen unanimously on the All-Southern team two years in succession and last year was selected on the All American second eleven.

The eighth draftee signed by the Redskins this year, Russell was recommended to owner George Marshall by Clifford Smith, coach at Villanova, and Gus Dorais, coach at Detroit, against whose teams the 6-foot-1 tackle played last season.

Redskins officials said Russell, light for the tackle position in professional football, may be shifted to guard. Russell, captain of the Auburn eleven last year, was No. 6 on the Skins' draft list. He first came to attention in the January 3 North-South game in Montgomery, Ala. His home is in Birmingham.

10-Game Streak Ends

A 10-game winning streak of Southeast Tigers was broken yesterday by Diamond Cab nine, 7 to 4, as D'Sousan held the losers to four safeties.

Griff Trying To Lure York From Tigers

Jimmy Wasdell Sent Back to Minneapolis; Haynes Hurls Today In Chisox Opener

By Shirley Povich.

In an atmosphere thick with reports of trades, releases and purchases, the Nats fared forth into the West again last night, leaving Owner Clark Griffith in the midst of long-distance telephone communications with other clubs.

The Nats entrained for Chicago with Jimmy Wasdell not among their company. Griffith yesterday afternoon announced that Wasdell had been released to Minneapolis of the American Association.

Outfielder Sammy West will be the Nats' first baseman pro tem. in the West, but Griffith is frantically attempting to swing a deal for a regular first-sacker. Another infielder and a veteran outfielder are also the objects of Griffith's search.

Coveting Rudy York

With four of his pitchers, one of his catchers and perhaps Travis tabbed as trading material, Griffith is coveting Rudy York, of the Tigers. The Detroit Club, a poor fifth in the race, is also in a trading mood, but are hesitant to part with the slugging York.

"I haven't given up on Wasdell," said Griffith charitably, in discussing the release of the young first baseman to Minneapolis. "I like his spirit and possibilities, but he needs experience. I think he'll be back."

With Minneapolis as a first baseman is big Phil Weintraub, a slugger when he was in the Southern Association, but Griffith declares that he is uninterested in Weintraub. "He had tryouts with the Giants and Phils," said Griffith." If he couldn't do well in the National League," we dont want him.

Still hewing to his plan to develop his own talent, Griffith admitted he is on the point of bringing up to the Nats two young first basemen in his farm system, Jimmy Vernon and Joe Pritchard. "Pritchard is hitting .390 down there at Charlotte," said Griffith. "He may be the fellow we are looking for."

West Shows Up Well

In any event, the Nats, with Sammy West at first base, are no worse ball club than with the erratic Wasdell playing the bag. West gave evidence of first-base talent in his first start on Decoration Day, and he is showing signs, too, of hitting his stride.

The Nats open their Western tour with a series against the White Sox at Chicago starting today, and they will have several old scores to settle. In fact, in six games against the Chicago Club this year, the Nats have won exactly none.

Joe Haynes, beaten in his last two starts, will get today's pitching assignment, and young Walter Masterson is also expected to make a start during the series. Like Haynes, Masterson has been unable to win since his maiden starting venture.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Only three things appear to be wrong with the Nats, (1), they don't hit very well; (2), they don't field very well, and (3), they don't have very good pitching. It isn't a pretty picture that confronts the Washington club today as it heads West with one-fourth of the 1939 season complete, seventh place only a half-game to the rear, and first place 15 games distant.

The Nats have been pursuing a Southern course in the American League standings since the season started. They head West today, but any mariners in audiences which have seen the Washington club perform lately would probably call it merely South by West. They aren't an improved ball club.

POVICH

The only action taken by Clark Griffith to revive the team was taken yesterday when he fired First Baseman Jimmy Wasdell, which was a negative sort of move. The immediate result of that act is a new burden for Manager Bucky Harris who is forced to play an outfielder, Sammy West, at first base.

Up in his little stucco office, or down in his field box or wherever he happens to be, Clark Griffith has been writhing in pain at the Nats' shoddy fielding, particularly. For years it was traditional that Washington teams never hit very well, and had few stand-out pitchers, but they always were a swell fielding club. What has been happening in their games this year has been enough to irk the tender sensibilities of Griffith on the subject.

Worst Defensive Team in League

The Nats' infield has probably been the worst defensive outfit in the league this season. Wasdell, seemingly, couldn't learn to play first base and was little improvement over lumbering Zeke Bonura whom Griffith described as the worst ballplayer he ever saw. Buddy Myer no longer rates with the fine second basemen, Cecil Travis is not a good shortstop, and estimates of Buddy Lewis' fielding at third base must be revised sharply downward.

The Nats might have been able to get along even with that sort of infielding, if they had the punch to offset it. But they don't. They lack the power. Six home runs, which is the total compiled by the Washington club this season, are an unflattering commentary on the team's power. Young Ted Williams, of the Red Sox, has hit as many homers as the entire team of Nats. Three of the Washington homers, incidentally, have been inside-the-park affairs. The Nats don't hit the ball out of the park.

There is a clamor for the conversion of Travis into a first baseman, but that may not be the solution of the Nats' infield troubles. Travis has not been in extreme good health since the start of the season. When the hits start to rattle from his bat with their accustomed frequency, his shortstopping deficiencies could be overlooked. There isn't any evidence that Travis would be a better first baseman than he is a shortstop. The transition isn't made very easily.

But the plight of the Nats has had one salutary effect. It has provided Griffith with trading material that he never before suspected he had. A year ago, he was emphatically refusing to trade some of his pets, but in his desperation now he is giving serious thought to trading not only Travis but Rick Ferrell. The man he wants is Rudy York, of the Tigers, who plays first base better than he catches or plays the outfield. York would look very important on first base for the Nats.

Rick Ferrell Tabbed as Trading Material

Ferrell is tabbed as trading material because of the belief now rampant among the Nats' bosses that young Jake Early can take over the regular catching duties nicely. Early, a strong-backed lad, has power at the plate and his throwing arm is probably the best in the league. He will have his brainstorms behind the bat, but Bucky Harris is willing to struggle along with the fellow.

In the direction of the Boston Red Sox lies the chief hope of a trade involving Ferrell. The Red Sox, nearest challengers of the Yankees, are suffering for the lack of a good catcher. Gene DeSautels is doing well enough behind the plate, but his .160 batting average is causing Cronin much pain. Who would the Red Sox give for Ferrell? That's the rub.

On the bright side of the Washington picture are three figures. The tall, angular form of Alex Alexandra on the pitching mound, the stream-lined George Case in centerfield, and boyish-looking Buddy Lewis. They comprise a trio who might lead the Nats out of the wilderness.

Certainly Alexandra is the most sensational rookie to flash across the big league scene since Bobby Feller appeared in 1934. That he is no flash in the pan is now pretty well established. One has only to look at his last three performances: A four-hit game against the Tigers, a three-hitter against the Browns, and another four-hit performance against the Athletics. The Venezuelan is now a considerable character with the Nats.

Not in years have the Nats possessed a scoring threat to equal the light-footed Case. His 19 steals thus far this season have been no mere exhibition. He has been stealing bases when they counted, when he could put an important run on second or third, as the case may be. And his batting average has climbed to a point above the .300 mark and he has learned how to play the outfield.

Buddy Lewis apparently has shaken off his twin fielding and hitting slumps. He is beginning to perform like the Lewis of two years ago who ranked with the best young players in the big leagues. Almost unnoticed has been Lewis' surge at the bat. He has been pounding pitching of all types for the past two weeks and is now showing a .300 average. He may be the answer to the Nats' search for a third-place hitter who can drive in some runs.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, May 31.—Hearings on United States Senator Barbour's bill to revoke the law which prohibits the shipment of fight films from one State to another have gone well beyond the original plans. The Barbour bill makes so much sense that it is bound to pass in a hurry, leaving a lot of the boys on Capitol Hill with many golden sentences unuttered in their throats. So for the time being the simple debate on the fight-film bill has developed into a windy Congressional investigation of boxing.

CONSIDINE

The solons, who wouldn't know a resin pan from a right cross, are being needled by the National Boxing Association's hard-working lobby in Washington, headed by the articulate Lieut. Col. Heinie Miller. We are an old disciple of the colonel's, having served a brief apprenticeship under him when he was a sport editor in Washington, and we recognize a lot of the old warrior's pet cliche's comcoming out of the throats of the statesmen. Barbour himself came forth with an intricate old Millerism when he thumped, "If boxing—the various commissions getting together—will not clean its own house, we are going to have to do it for them."

The Senate Has a Job

Senator Barbour, and some of the other pin-striped chest heavers, could make better use of their time. If they try to bring together, under one roof, all the knaves, rascals, good men, geniuses, bad men, bums, touts, handlers, con men, mugs and bumpkins who make up the dear daffy old game, they will encounter headaches they wouldn't wish on their worst political enemies.

Senator Johnson, of Colorado, made five revelations during a long soundoff on boxing. With pardonable pride he released the following bombshells:

1.—Boxing has moved from a "sport" to a "business" and is fast becoming a "racket."

3.—It has come along to where thinking people are beginning to ask, "Does the commission control the promoter or does the promoter control the commission?"

4.—The curse of boxing for years has been "the house fighter," the boxer "owned" by a promoter. With leading boxers signed up on long term contracts by any one promoter, you have a super "house fighter." If a promoter in Minnesota, for instance, had the money, the seating capacity, the facilities to stage a world's heavyweight title bout between two evenly matched men, could he stage that bout in Minneapolis without cutting in or getting permission from an out-of-town promoter?

5.—Boxing is fast reaching a stage where it is due for an investigation and a housecleaning. When baseball was found to be rotting, baseball itself secured a Judge Landis. Boxing should have foresight and sense enough to do the same, or very soon, by law or otherwise, there will be no more professional boxing.

But the Senator Is Late

Them's harsh and fearless words, Senators. But you're a little off, here and there. Boxing, instead of becoming a racket, is becoming a business again. The racket boys are just about gone from the game. There wasn't any steady dough in it as they thought, and they won't be back until, with the aid of Congress, boxing reaches a Utopian state comparable to the lush days of the '20's, when a fight between Billy Sunday and a glass of wicked beer would have drawn a half a million.

It is, indeed, a monopoly. Mike Jacobs is boss by virtue of his contracts with Louis, Bettina, Apostoli, Krieger, Armstrong, Ambers and a few others, but the fellow actually has run his business a little more cleanly than the game deserves. Aside from a scalped and lacerated ticket, now and then, Mike has been on the up and up and what has happened in his rings has set a new high for honesty in prize fighting.

Jacobs is a czar today because he's a hustling old schemer who never misses a bet and is willing to gamble. Most of his critics are failures, ousted crooks or idealists who instead of trying to unearth a new breed of fighters want Jacobs to give up the ones he found, developed and is now exploiting.

Dodgers Beat Giants Again, 7-4, With 3-Run Uprising in 8th

Tightens Grip on 5th Place in N. L.

Schumacher Chased By Flatbush Slugging; Luke Hamlin Goes Route for Flatbush

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—The Brooklyn Dodgers tightened their hold on fifth place in the National League today with a stirring 7-4 victory over their city rivals, the Giants, today.

The victory, which came in the eighth inning, when they shoved three runs across on four hits, gave them a 2-1 edge in the series.

Tied from the third inning, the Dodgers routed Hal Schumacher from the mound in the eighth with a four-hit assault, good for three runs. John Hudson's single scored Dolph Camilli, who had singled, and sent Manager Leo Durocher to third. Durocher's bounder had forced Mungo at second. Then Al Todd, batting for Tuck Stainback, doubled past Mel Ott in right-center, scoring Durocher and Hudson.

The Dodgers started the game with a three-run attack, but the Giants managed to tie it up at 4-all in the third with a three-hit salvo, one of them a homer by Mel Ott.

Luke Hamlin, who went the route for the Dodgers, allowed but six hits in chalking up his fifth win of the season.

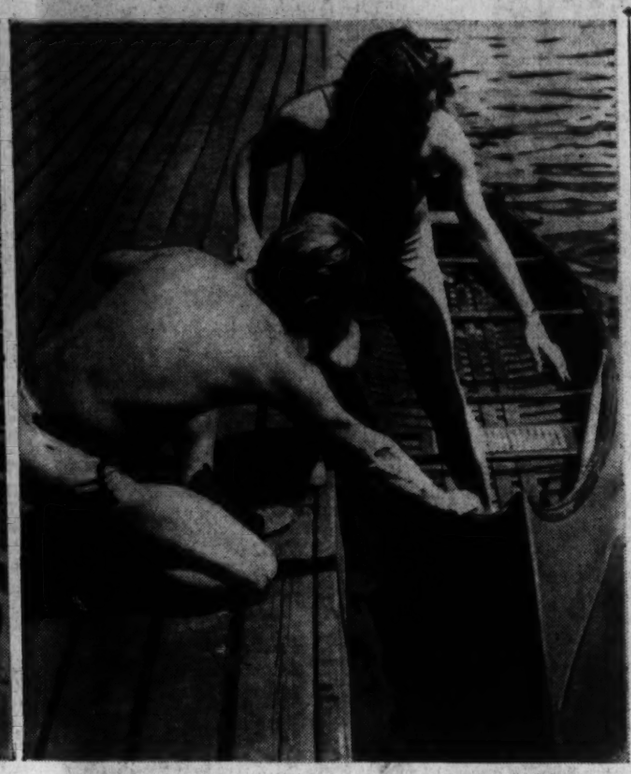
Right and Wrong in a Canoe: Article I

Amateur Canoeist Should First Learn How to Enter Craft

This approach to the canoe is certain to bring a disheartening ducking to the canoeing fans almost every time. For instance, the little lady is building up to the splash by crossing her feet in a sort of half-spinner entry. The intrepid oarsman standing almost amidships is violating all manner of canoe etiquette. Note that both carry paddles which will add to the general state of unbalance



Post Staff Photos.

J. W. Burch, Veteran Racer and Teacher, Tells How to Use Canoe Properly

By Al Hailey.

The first thing anyone who wants to get along as a canoeist should learn is how to enter the canoe without taking a ducking.

This was ably demonstrated yesterday by J. W. Burch, veteran canoe racer and teacher of the Potomac Boat Club, at the club's floats above Key Bridge.

Burch, former commodore of the American Canoe Association, would like to dispell the qualms of those who have had unlucky experiences with canoeing, a sport which boathouses up and down the Potomac said is hitting a new high this year.

It develops that this initial step—acquiring a successful entry into the canoe—is one which discourages many potential canoeists and annually takes a large toll in spills and dampened ardor.

"While it is generally known that standing up in a canoe invites trouble, unless it is done properly, few persons stop to think about this," Burch said.

Demonstrating his point, Burch stepped into a canoe and stood by waiting for his daughter, Bette, to step in and complete the picture of confusion. As Burch stood striving to hold the canoe in place with a paddle, in the best novice fashion, the canoe rocked dangerously. Miss Burch violated form by stepping into the canoe carrying a paddle, entering at right angles to the craft—a feat likely to end with her flat on her face in the water.

"The trick of entering is in shifting the weight evenly," Burch explained. "You should plant the foot nearest the canoe in first, entering with a side step, and then transferring the weight from the land foot in such a way as not to kick the canoe away from land."

Goodall Golf Play Starts

paired for tomorrow's opening round with Harry Cooper and Denny Shute. The other threesomes will be P. G. A. Champion Paul Runyan with Jimmy Hines and Jimmy Thomson; Open Champion Ralph Guldahl with Dick Metz and Craig Wood; Snead, Johnny Revolta and Olin Dutra, and Horton Smith, Ben Hogan and Tony Penna.

For the two rounds each to be played Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the pairings will be shifted, so that by the end of the tournament each man will have met each of his rivals once.

As an added feature of tomorrow's program the tournament's sponsor, Elmer Ward, former New England amateur champion, has arranged for an hour's "golf lesson" before the matches begin. This will run from 12:30 p. m. (E. S. T.) until 1:30, when Runyan, Hines and Thomson will lead the parade down the fairway.

W.-L. Defeated By McKinley In 11th, 10 to 8

Two big rallies, one for four runs in the ninth and the other for three in the 11th, won a 10 to 8 baseball decision for McKinley High yesterday over Washington-Lee High at Arlington field.

The Maroon went into the ninth on the short end of a 6 to 3 count, scored four times off four singles and a passed ball which W. L.'s Shepherd, catcher, couldn't find though it was 10 feet from hte plate, and saw the Little Generals knot it up in their half with Shepherd's double and Kendall's error.

In the 11th, Tech tried again, this time their three tallies being too much for Washington-Lee, which could retaliate with only one. Eli Blank's four hits, including a homer in the first, and Heinie Webb's three singles paced the winning stickwork. Kirchner, Shepherd and French punched out extra base hits for the losers.

Bethesda C. C. Wins, 20-5, Over Gaithersburg

Its most one-sided diamond victory of the season was registered by Bethesda-Chevy Chase High yesterday at Gaithersburg, where it smashed out a 20-to-5 triumph over the defending high school.

The eventual winners scored only two runs in the first four frames and trailed, 3-2, going into the fifth. Four runs in that period, five in the seventh and six in th eeighth and three in the ninth settled the issue conclusively.

Gaithersburg garnered only six safeties off pitchers MacLeod and Custer but did most of its scoring on the seven misplays committed by the winners. All but four of the 11 men used by Bethesda had a pair of hits, the home runs of humate and Boswell featuring the game.

Four Horses Finish Only Noses Apart

Enthusiasm Second Lady Buck Third In Story Book Finish; Cats Cradle Fourth

By Walter Haight.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., May 31.—In a soul-stirring finish, generally found only in story books and movies, four horses stretched their necks to put their noses forward at the imaginary wire in today's feature race. Judges, customers and press box inhabitants then joined in a lot of arguing and head scratching while the camera crew developed a picture. The photo showed that W. D. Jones' Timber Lady had won by the narrowest of margins over Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Enthusiasm. The judges then found it necessary to get other pictures to determine that W. Royle's Lady Buck had nosed out Capt. Johnston's Cats Cradle out of third money.

Had Enthusiasm put just a trifle more "umph" in his final jump, it would have been a perfect day for Mrs. Whitney, who motored over from Virginia to entertain a party of friends in the clubhouse.

Timber Lady was overlooked in the betting and paid $17 while running the 4½ furlongs in .50, a second off the track record held by Irene's Bob. Jockey Beverly Hacker turned in an excellent job of riding on the Tall Timber mare and he held her together approaching the wire with his three rivals shooting the works at him.

Cats Cradle was first to show in front, but she was soon joined by Timber Lady and Enthusiasm. Timber Lady came to the inside and Mrs. Whitney's horse to the outside. This trio then ran as a team to the stretch where the boys went to work with a vengeance. In the meanwhile Lady Buck had been trying to get through and finally was forced to go to the outside for racing room.

Nearing the wire it was "anybody's race," and a beautiful thing to see. Horses were all out and riders were going everywhere. As they hit the wire there was nothing to do but wait for the picture. Without a camera, the judges would have had to guess.

BORO POKER shook off KENNER to draw out, set strong pace and won with speed in reserve. KENNER, off well, was closest to pace from start and closed gamely while being held safe. RAZZLE DAZZLE was bumped by GOANTELL at start, was forced to race wide and closed full of run. GOANTELL swerved at break, was strongly handled and closed well. GEE SHARP went well placed and weakened. SANTA MARITA could not keep up. MISS BONES had early speed. WINDSOR BOY was always outrun.

ADRIATIC, first away, drew clear of BIG BUDDY without effort, saved ground, but had to be put to strong hand ride to hold BLIND TALK safe. BLIND TALK lacked early speed, worked way to contention while saving ground and finished with good courage. SIR WARNING moved up closest to pace on backstretch, but weakened gradually thereafter. DUCHESS DEL closed a gap from slow beginning. CANTERET raced very wide throughout.

COUNORA, steadied along while racing with WHITTLE PETE in early stages, took command when asked, opened a lons lead and won easily. JUDGE'S BID, forced wide and lacking early speed, came with bold rush in final sixteenth, but was held perfectly safe. GESTURE moved up menacingly approaching stretch and weakened. SOME GROUCHER saved ground entering stretch. WHITTLE PETE stopped. ART COOPER was punished from start. MARQUETT started outside gate.

BEAU BON, slow to begin, worked way to contention on outside, and closed with bold rush, but did not appear to have gotten up. WANDERBIRD, cut off sharply by CHILIAD at first turn, improved position on inside and came with good courage at end under strong handling. NAY NAY outran field to first turn, shook off CHILIAD, saved ground, but weakened right at end. WELSH LAD had a rough trip. CHILIAD, recklessly handled at first turn, forced pace and tired slightly.

FIFTH RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:21½. Off 4:24½. Winner, E. H. Titmus, Jr.'s, ch. g. STAND BY, well placed from start, disposed of SELDOMGO to take command and held sway thereafter under strong urging. GREEN WATER saved ground when outrun going to first turn, improved position gradually, but could not menace winner seriously. NATIONAL gained throughout running. SMALL CHANGE moved up after three furlongs and weakened. SELDOMGO set early pace and stopped. FRED ALMY ran out badly entering backstretch.

TIMBER LADY, sent through on inside to take brief lead, was hard handled and barely lasted under punishment. ENTHUSIASM, forced to race on outside of leaders from start, responded willingly when placed to drive and closed with good courage. LADY BUCK, unable to get through approaching stretch, went to outside for racing room and closed fastest of all. CAT'S CRADLE took early lead, raced between TIMBER LADY and ENTHUSIASM for final three furlongs and held on willingly. HAPPY HOST and DOLLED UP were held safe.

CHAMPFLEURY was hard ridden and had no excuses. ARTIST KNIGHT had early speed. HUPPY closed well. MAD DAMMISIN was pulled up when tired.

Bill Bennings

At The Post

Charles Town, W. Va., May 31.
Dear Al:

While neither has admitted it, there seems to be a feud here between Jockeys Sammy Palumbo and Lou Machado. At least it looks that way in races. The other day, Palumbo, riding Miss Epe, cut off Machado aboard Worthowning, in midstretch. Lou didn't go up in the stand to claim a foul, however. Today, Palumbo, on Chiliad, pulled over in front of Wander Bird at the first turn. Again Machado took it without complaint, although from all appearances he was fouled and would have won otherwise. Earlier in the meeting, Machado seemed to be giving it to Palumbo. Donald Hay, in charge of the mutuel department, deserves a little credit. Despite the big Memorial Day crowd, I'm told that few, if any betters were shut out during the long afternoon. R. F. Cook is the "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons of the local meeting. The Washington boy has saddled seven winners and four seconds from his stable of fit ones. Getting back to Palumbo and Machado, they are in the thick of a battle for riding honors. Going into today's program, Palumbo, with 13 winners, was leading his rival by one. Jockey J. A. Taylor went over to Wheeling and found so many boys there that he decided to return to this track and got in this morning. Rain is badly needed in this country. Both the owners of mudrunners and the nearby farmers would appreciate some help from the bad weather department. The track is faster than ever. Three track marks have fallen and two have been equaled since the session here began. Jockey W. Dufford has left for New York. Jockey Herbie Lauch gets back in action tomorrow after a suspension. After a check up, "Charts" Smith writes me that Mrs. Bennings' lovely boy was the leading handicapper during the Maryland spring meetings.

BILL.

First race—Miss Maker took a beating last out. She didn't fancy the turns and was forced into second money. With a trip over the course under her saddle strap I look for her to take the purse. Seplin comes from a good stable and has good speed. Doctor's Nurse to take care of the others.

Second race—Night Play appears to be the right one in this field despite the 116-pound assignment. Likes the short sprint route and needs only to break. Center March had poor racing luck last out and should show improvement. Small Devil is a possible surprise.

Third race—Hurdy Gurdy will step home in this field if the track remains fast. This one has been racing into top form. If conditions change, take her off the top. Chessie will have Palumbo up, so I'm told. This seven furlong route suits. Eleanor O. may forget to stop.

Fourth race—Sun Tempest is a former stake horse and needs only to be a good shadow of his old self to take down the chief money. Blue Prelude has plenty of speed and is dangerous. A change of conditions would help. Canrock would be dangerous if in action.

Fifth race—Lyde turned in an impressive victory here and then failed to run up to expectations. Appears slightly best in this company. Princess Lady ran one good race and could be close. Red Glare to take care of the others.

Sixth race—Caidon galloped home in front of fair ones last out and seems to have the edge in this field. Madfoot has plenty of speed but may stop after getting a taste of the top one. Shanteb, despite heavy weight, is a threat.

Seventh race—Sea Boy picks up weight but turned in a convincing victory in that most recent start. Another good ride will do the trick. Puddles raced poorly in that last but is better than that effort. Counter Pass won her last.

Eight race—Proprietary may be the right one in this rather open race. Understand there will be a change in riders. Orkil's Russet and Prince Khayyam have the *front-running ability but may run each other into the ground.

Sub race—If this race is used I'll take Sir Rose, Sun Belle, and Jimmie S.

Best bet—Night Play.

Schoolboy Golf Event for Post Trophy Begins Tomorrow

Qualifying Round Set For Kenwood

Frank Emmet Saves 6th Annual Tourney In Last Minute; Entries Close at 6

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The District schoolboy match play championship for The Washington Post Trophy was salvaged in last-minute fashion yesterday by Francis X. Emmet, and the tournament will begin tomorrow at Kenwood under the sponsorship of the District Golf Association.

A field of 40 or more of the best scholastic linksmen in the city and suburban high and prep schools are expected to enter the event today by calling Emmet at Woodley 4921 by 6 p. m.

The action was typical of Emmet, who has boosted and supported scholastic golf here for a number of years and who is responsible for the success of the various tournaments and for the rise of young stars into the major tournament picture here.

Friday's qualifying round for the championship flight of 16 players will begin at 2 p. m. at Kenwood. The first and second round match play scene will be Manor Club, where the initial matches will begin at 8 a. m. Saturday and the quarter-finals at 11:45.

Semifinals Sunday

The semifinals will get under way Sunday at 8 a. m., at Washington Golf and Country Club, with the finals slated for 11:45 over the same course. Dallas McGrew, president of the District Golf Association, and Andy Bain, Harry Pitt and Ralph Fowler, golf committee chairmen of the three clubs, co-operated with Emmet in salvaging the tournament.

With no definite dates or sites set aside at the beginning of the year, the event was apparently scratched from the calendar until yesterday's action by Emmet.

The permanent trophy, donated by The Washington Post, will go to the winner of the sixth annual event for one year, while the new champion will receive a replica for permanent possession. The original trophy is placed in the trophy case at the winner's school.

Sharkey at Georgetown

The 1938 champion, Francis "Buddy" Sharkey, now a freshman at Georgetown University, has passed from the schoolboy ranks and thus fifth champion will be crowned in the six years of play. Sharkey was also medalist in the tournament last year at Georgetown Prep, while he was finalist in a previous event.

Frank Allan, the Pittston, Pa., player, runner-up in the Chevy Chase Invitation for three consecutive years, was the first winner, while Billy Shea followed for two consecutive years, and was succeeded by Bobby Brownell and then Sharkey. They are all outstanding young golfers of this section.

The favorite will be Wilson High's Ralph Bogart, the Army and Navy Club champion, but a schoolmate, Earl Skinker, and David "Scotty" Ross, Rockville High's undefeated captain, will be definite threats. Any number of additional players will be in dark-horse roles, including last year's finalist, Jimmy Thompson, of Montgomery Blair, if he should play.

Hufty, McKammon, In Cup Finals

Page Hufty and J. K. McKammon advanced to the final round of the Treasurer's Cup Play at Chevy Chase yesterday, defeating E. A. Hickman and F. W. Coleman, 4 and 3. Hufty had a 71, two over par, and his partner, a 14-handicap player, a 79.

They will meet Walter White and D. M. Matthinson for the title.

Mrs. Mullins Wins Argyle Tourney

Mrs. Hilda Mllins won the Frag tournament of the Argyle Women's Golf Committee, while second prize went to Miss Marie Drury.

Chicago, May 31.—The New York Metropolitan and the New England sections of the Professional Golfers Association were awarded the largest number of qualifying places today for the association's annual championship, July 9-15 at the Pomonok Country Club, Long Island, N. Y.

The Middle Atlantic section, Maryland, Virginia and the District, received only three places, in comparison to the four allotted places of 1938. The qualifying berths are awarded on a percentage of the paid up members of the P. G. A. in each section, about one to every 10 members.

Wiffy Cox, Congressional; Leo Walper, Andy Gibson, Baltimore, and Ernie Ball, Charlottesville, won the four places from the Mid-Atlantic sector last year to the Shawnee tournament, all qualifying for match play but losing in the first round.

Tom Walsh, national P. G. A. secretary, made public the list of qualifying places and those exempt from qualifying, with the Metropolitan and New England sections each receiving eight. Seven places each were awarded the Illinois and Philadelphia sections. The qualifying places total 102.

Paul "Little Poison" Runyan, who won the 1938 championship, heads the list of exemptions. Others who automatically gained the right to compete were Jim Foulis, Gene Sarazen, Horton Smith and Byron Nelson, quarter finalists last year; Johnny Revolta, Walter Hagen, Tony Manero, Ralph Guldahl, Henry Picard and Ed Dudley, all Ryder Cup team members; Sam Snead, runner-up to Runyan last year, and Jimmy Hines, semifinalist in 1938. In addition, the 1939 National Open champion will qualify automatically, as will the home club professional, Joe Sylvester.

Indian Spring, Chevy Chase Tied in Golf

Manor Wins Title For Third Teams in D. C. Women's Matches

Indian Spring and Chevy Chase moved into a tie in the first team matches of the Women's District Golf Association yesterday at the latter club, leaving their title claims to the two final matches, while at Indian Spring, Manor won the championship of the third teams in the short, three-match schedule.

The Norbeck club linkswomen blanked Army and Navy, that could muster only three players for the final match, and topped the four-club race with 14½ points, while Congressional, who defeated Columbia, 5½ to ½, finished second with 10½; Army and Navy was next with 10, and Columbia last, with a single point.

Scores Shutout

The members of the victorious Manor team that competed on the final day's play included Mrs. James Hill, jr., Mrs. Don Hutchison, Mrs. H. L. Simcoe and Mrs. Max Taylor.

In the first team matches, Indian Spring scored a shutout over Washington, 12-0; Chevy Chase won, 10½ to 1½, over Woodmont; Manor scored over Crogressional, 8-4, and Army and Navy won all but a half point against Argyle, with the Silver Spring club, in its first year of competition, scoring for the second time.

The co-leaders each totaled 60 points at the end of the day's play, with Indian Spring picking up a point and a half. Manor meets Indian Spring next week and Chevy Chase opposes Congressional, while the title will definitely be decided the following week when Indian Spring and Chevy Chase meet at Army and Navy.

Woodmont in Front

After Mrs. Myron Davy starred in the first match of the Congressional-Manor encounter, as she and Mrs. Bush lost to Marion Brown and Mrs. L. G. Pray when the latter parred the final hole, Mrs. H. A. Knox and Mrs. J. J. McCarthy won all three against Mrs. Daily and Florence Scott to cut down Manor's margin of victory.

Woodmont scored in two of the matches against Chevy Chase, while Mrs. Ed Widmayer and Mrs. A. J. Hamilton accounted for Argyle's half-point. Mrs. Betty Meckley and Mrs. Walter Stokes were low as Indian Spring blanked Washington.

Manor and Congressional each scored 8-1 triumphs while Chevy Chase won 5-4 over Washington, despite forfeiting 3 points, in second team play at Indian Spring.

NEWS TO YOU—
This Glamour Cigar

HERE'S an entirely new conception of a ten-cent cigar—this Robt. Burns Corona. Frankly it is made to surpass cigars of its class—designed to surprise men paying more than ten cents for cigars. To say that it is better than ten-cent classification may sound blunt, but that's the fact of it.

With the prestige of its patrician corona shape, the classic model that has cast its spell over smokers for many a year, the luscious Robt. Burns Corona is the glamour cigar of the ten-cent field. It challenges you Havana smokers who love a hearty, full-bodied cigar. Many smokers find it hard to believe it can be sold at ten cents. Try it at a dime at any good cigar stand. Your doubt will vanish in fragrant smoke.

● At last four luxury cigar features at a dime: 1. All-Havana filler. 2. Skilled craftsmanship. 3. Shade-grown wrapper. 4. Classical corona shape.

Londos Meets Terror Tonight

Two Women Wrestlers Also on Card

Main Bout Listed For 'Championship;' 4 Other Engagements To Support Features

Jim Londos, wrestling's No. 1 world's champion, will come to town tonight to do battle with the Golden Terror, hooded gentleman, in the first outdoor wrestling card of the season at Griffith Stadium.

The show will open at 8:30 p. m. and will feature everything from women grapplers to the more routine spectacle of ringside heckling from fans.

Billed as a "world's heavyweight champion wrestling match," the Londos-Terror melee is scheduled to go 90 minutes, barring the Gorgeous Greek becoming bored and putting the masked man through his famed airplane spin.

The Terror, who will be spurred on by his masked manager, for the first time in several months, has not been pinned in Washington in 16 exhibitions. He lost to Londos in Philadelphia and gained a draw with the champion in Baltimore, however.

Londos, nearing 50 years of age, is said to be talking of forgetting wrestling and going back to Greece, leading local wrestling gentlemen to believe The Terror may have a chance tonight.

The girl wrestlers are Clara Mortensen and Betty Bowman. Others who will roan are Nanjo Singh and Pete Managoff, Jack Hader and Dropkick Murphy, Hank Metheny and Jules Strongbow and Jim Clinstock and Sammy Stein.

Wrestlers Sit One Out at Turner's Arena

Joey Archibald In Best Shape Yet, Says Weill

Al Weill, manager of Joey Archibald, world's featherweight champion, informed local boxing officials yesterday that Archibald "will be in the finest shape of his career" Monday night when he steps in the ring at Griffith Statdium against Mexican Joe Silva.

"Archibald is in splendid condition, and you will see a great featherweight champion in action," Weill said.

At the same time, Heinie Miller, secretary of the District Bxing Commission, said Weill had written him warning that Silva must weigh in at 127 for the nontitle bout.

"I had trouble once before with Laken and I don't want the the same thing over agin," he said. "Jack Laden promised me his boy would weigh 135 pounds for the Ambers bout, but when he stepped on the scales at the weighing-in, the Mexican was down to 131 pounds."

The New York manager told local boxing moguls that after his letter reached Col. Miller "I do not expect to worry any further about this weight matter."

Weill also complained about the weight of the 8-ounce gloves which District boxing regulations require, calling them various kinds of overstuffed mattresses, Col Miller said.

Archibald will be giving away about 4 pounds in the ten-round bout Monday and alongside the cross-eyed Mexican fighter he is almost dwarfed. Silva will tower several inches above the tough Providence champion.

Given a good chance to win, Silva will take the No. 2 featherweight challenger's spot if he does beat Archibald. The Mexican, however, is understood to be gunning for a shot at Henry Armstrong's lightweight title and wants an Archibald victory to add to his prestige. Silvia's reception at the Mexican Embassay has been postponed until noon today.

The Brighter Side

—By Damon Runyon

And now here we have the summer book odds on the Democratic field of possible candidates for the Presidential nomination of that party in 1940, as compiled by our Washington handicapper:

Garner, Texas	Even
Roosevelt, New York	2 to 1
Farley, New York	10 to 1
Douglas, Connecticut	15 to 1
Hull, Tennessee	20 to 1
Hopkins, Iowa	25 to 1
Clark, Missouri	20 to 1
Jones, Texas	15 to 1
Stark, Missouri	30 to 1
Wallace, Iowa	40 to 1
Ickes, Illinois	50 to 1
Woodrum, Virginia	60 to 1
McNutt, Indiana	20 to 1
Kennedy, Massachusetts	50 to 1
Murphy, Michigan	20 to 1
Byrd, Virginia	15 to 1

We remarked to our handicapper after looking over his list that he had certainly turned in a lot of names, and he said with some pride that it just showed you what a wealth of material the Democracy of the United States can present in a crisis like a Presidential nomination. Our handicapper is himself a Democrat.

RUNYON

We asked him if the price of 2 to 1 against President Roosevelt was made with any reference to the doubt as to whether or not the President will run again and he said no, on the contrary it was made on the assumption, for the purposes of the summer book, that he will run. Our handicapper said that on that assumption his figures still made Garner the favorite at the moment, though he admitted that a flat announcement from the President one way or the other would make considerable difference in the prices.

He said it was a cinch that an official announcement that the President is not going to run would make Garner odds-on, at least for the time being. If Roosevelt declared he is going to run, our handicapper said he would immediately make both Garner and Roosevelt 9 to 10 and take your pick. Incidentally, he said he makes it 8 to 5 that the President will go for a third term nomination.

What About Farley?

We remarked that prices like 9 to 10 and even money, or 2 to 1, are not our leather. We fancy 'em good and long, and we asked our handicapper what about Jim Farley? We said we noticed he was third choice in the summer book at 10 to 1, and our handicapper said yes, and it might be an over-lay, at that. He said Jim Farley is the big puzzle to him.

He said he tried to clock Jim on the Postmaster General's recent trip west, but that Jim had worked pretty well under cover so he was unable to get a good line on him. He said he had supposed Jim was an entry with Garner or Hull and then he heard some rumors that Jim was out hustling up delegates on his own account, and other rumors that he was feeling the public pulse on the third term thing.

He said the last was not altogether implausible, because no matter what anybody says, Jim had a lot to do with putting the gentleman he always calls "the boss" in the White House and with keeping him there, and Jim has a lot of Irish sentimentality in his make-up, and probably still retains considerable affection for Roosevelt, so if the latter said "Now Jim, you've got to really 'round," maybe Jim just could not resist.

But, our handicapper asked, in the event he was out in behalf of Roosevelt, did not that come under the head of giving his other supposed allies what the boys terms "the business?" And if he was calling on the trade on his own account, was not that giving his old friend in the White House "the business," too?

He's a Problem

We said we could not consider the theory at all, because the last man in the world to give anybody "the business" would be Jim Farley. Our handicapper said that was just what worried him about Jim. He said he realized that Jim did not know how to give anybody "the business" probably and that in trying to give it, sheer inexperience would surely get him in a jam with all hands.

We said maybe Roosevelt had decided that if he finally deemed it inexpedient to run again himself, Jim was the man by right of faithfulness and service to at least have the chance to take over the job and that he had told Jim to go out and see how the land lay. Our handicapper said, somewhat dubiously, that it sounded too much like an excess of gratitude in this ungrateful age, but that there might be something in our thought.

He said anyway he reckoned he had better cut Farley to about 8 to 1 in his next send-out.

Fairfax Group Named to Study Athletic Field

Chambliss Appoints Nonpartisan Body On Renting of Tract

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST. P. O. BOX 248, Fairfax, Va. Phone Falls Church 2085-M.

J. H. Chambliss, chairman of the Citizens Nonpartisan Committee, last night appointed Charles Pendleton, H. B. Weaver, Dr. Macon Ware and William S. Brown a committee to study the possibility of renting a tract of land in the town for use by the pupils of the town schools as an athletic field until such time as the school board and town council supply this need.

The action was taken following the report that the field adjoining Madison School, formerly used as a playground, has recently been subdivided, taking away the only playing field available to either school.

Approves Report

Falls Church.—The town council at a special meeting expressed its approval of the State highway commission's project to widen and improve the Lee Highway from Broad street to Hillwood avenue. Mayor Daniel reported that so far only one property holder has declined to give the necessary right of way.

The improvements will involve moving back the Payne house and building a retaining wall on the Updike property. The improvement calls for a 50-foot right of way with a 5-foot curb, gutter and sidewalk on each side of a 40-foot roadway.

Rail Heads Vote Fare Reduction

Round-Trip Coach Tickets to Be Cut ¼ Cent a Mile

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—The Eastern Railroad Presidents' Conference announced today a decision to reduce round-trip fares in coaches from 2½ cents a mile to 2¼ cents a mile on trips of 100 miles or less. Progressively greater reductions would be made on longer trips. The roads now must apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to change rates.

F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central Railroad, and president of the conference, said there also would be some reductions on one-way Pullman charges.

The question of reducing railroad fares in the East has been a moot matter among the railroads for months past. Under the presidents' agreement the 2¼-cent-a-mile rate would progressively diminish in 50-mile blocks until a minimum rate of 1.7 cents a mile would be paid on distances of 901 miles and more. This minimum rate would represent a reduction of 32 per cent from the present fares.

The conference is an organization of the managements of Eastern lines. Those present at today's meeting were Williamson, M. W. Clement, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad; J. M. Davis, president of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western; C. E. Denney, president-trustee of the Erie; Howard S. Palmer, president-trustee of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and E. W. Scheer, president of the Reading Co. and Central Railroad of New Jersey.

Cotton Futures Close 20 to 45 Cents A Bale Higher

New York, May 31 (AP).—Heavy buying of textiles inspired last-hour buying of cotton futures today that hauled final prices to the best for the day. The closing range was up 4 to 9 points.

The market held to a steady course in early dealings but orders on both sides were small until trade interests became active late in the session.

Sales of cotton cloths were estimated to have exceeded even those of Monday, when from 15,000,000 to 18,000,000 yards of standard print cloth and broadcloth constructions were moved.

Cottonseed Oil

A little early buying of cottonseed oil futures petered out, leaving final prices today 1 point lower to as much higher. The trade awaited new developments regarding cotton crop conditions before taking a definite stand.

Sales totaled 30 lots: July, 6.62; September, 6.78;* October, 6.83; December, 6.78;* January 6.90.*

Crude oil continued quietly at 3½ cents nominal in the southeast and valley and 3½ to 3.30 nominal in Texas.

Central of N. J. Plans Interest Adjustment

New York, May 31 (AP).—A voluntary plan of interest adjustment was approved today by directors of the Central Railroad of New Jersey for submission to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Principal provision is the placing of interest on the company's general mortgage bonds on a 25 per cent fixed basis and on a 75 per cent contingent basis to January 1, 1944, or if bondholders elect, for a shorter period. Approval of 90 per cent of the owners of outstanding bonds is required to make the plan effective.

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, which controls Central Railroad of New Jersey, is likewise negotiating with bondholders for a voluntary debt adjustment plan which already has been accepted by a large number.

Hidden Food Taxes

Chicago, May 31.—Purchases in food stores alone by American families last year returned an estimated $850,000,000 in hidden taxes, according to the National Consumers Tax Commission. The women's tax education organization says taxes shifted to consumer in 1938 took 7.8 per cent of the estimated $8,000,000,000 spent for food.

Living Costs of Worker Holds Below 1938

Low Prices and Higher Wages Are Principal Factors

Minneapolis, May 31.—With pay checks partially recovered and living costs still down, the average wage-earner's family is not as well off financially as in the spring of 1937, and is definitely ahead of its situation as of a year ago, according to a current study of family buying power just completed by Northwestern National Life Insurance Co.

Average monthly wages per worker rose gradually from last November through March of this year, with a dip in April, the study shows, while cost of living has declined with little interruption since October, 1937.

Food for an average family costs about $4 a month less this spring than it did in the spring of 1937; about a dollar and a quarter less than in the spring of 1938. Average rental rates are about the same as in the spring of '37; clothing costs a little less; the family car can operate more cheaply because gasoline is lower.

A typical family earning $120 a month at average pay rates of 1933 and spending the same sum for living at 1933's average prices, had to pay $140.88 to maintain the same standard of living in April, 1937, but meanwhile its monthly pay check, based on industrial pay roll figures, had climbed to $147.36.

Food Is Cheaper

A month's supply of food for a family of four, obtainable for $30 at 1933 prices, cost $38.67 for the same items in April, 1937; $35.88 in April of 1938, and $34.61 in April of this year. Though the long decline in living costs leveled off in April, the report states, wholesale food prices again dropped sharply the third week in May.

Average wages per worker in February, 1939, were actually above February of 1937, the study shows. From January through April of 1937, however, the spurt in wages was spectacularly swift, the report recalls. The rise since last October has been gradual, and, with the dip in April, has not kept pace with the 1937 spring pay roll expansion, which reached its peak in May of that year. Living costs spurted upward in early 1937 also, however; in 1939 they have actually worked lower. Thus the average family is fully as well off now in terms of actual buying power as it was in the spring of '37, the report states.

Reflecting the Nation-wide expansion in building, construction employment has shown a gratifying increase. The seasonal spring pick-up in retail employment has been above average; the gain in total factory employment has been below average, with the aircraft industry, spurred by war orders, standing out as a shining exception; employment in the aviation industry is running almost double what it was in 1929, the study states.

No Import Duty on 16-Inch Newsprint

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury advised publishers yesterday that all newsprint in rolls 16 inches or more wide may be imported free of duty.

The commonly used widths of newsprint were on the free list, but to eliminate red tape over the occasional importation of certain widths, the Treasury changed its regulations to define "standard newsprint" as any newsprint 16 or more inches wide.

Wheat Prices Advance With Hot Weather

Profit-Taking at The Close Cuts 1⅜ Cents Rise

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, May 31.—Hot weather in U. S. grain belts and a reduction in estimates of domestic wheat crop boosted wheat prices 1⅜ cent today to their best level of the season. The advance, however, attracted profit-taking that cut closing gains.

Prices held up well during most of the session, July wheat reaching 79¼, September 79⅛ and December 80, all equalling season highs set last week. Rye gained nearly 2 cents, closing 1⅛@1¼ up at new season highs.

Wheat closed ⅛@¾ up, July and September 78¼@78⅜; corn ¼ off to ⅜ up, July 51½@51⅝, September, 53@53⅛; oats ¼@½ up; lard unchanged to 2 cents lower.

Wheat prices at Kansas City and Minneapolis scored new season highs, with the latter market up nearly 2 cents at times. Winnipeg lagged, due partly to the small upturn at Liverpool, where closing prices were ⅜@½ higher. Kansas City closed ¼@⅝ up, Minneapolis ⅝@¾ up and Winnipeg unchanged to ⅛ lower.

Electric Institute Notes Expansion In Industry

New York, May 31 (AP).—A great expansion in the Nation's electric service through 1938, despite the year's decline in business activity, was featured today in the annual statistical report of the Edison Electric Institute.

"The most significant aspect of the year's operations," the institute said, "was the further increase in the use of energy by residential, farm and small commercial customers. This growth occurred during a year when the general level of business was below that of 1937.

"It is further evidence of the results achieved by the continuing efforts of utility companies, in cooperation with appliance dealers, in building up load and of the growing recognition by customers of the value and cheapness of electric service in the home, on the farm and in small commercial establishments."

Commenting on the increased stability which has been occasioned by the greater diversification of the use of electricity since 1926, when comprehensive electric statistics were first collected, the institute stated: "The marked change which has taken place in the last 13 years in the proportion of the total energy used by different classes of customers is emphasized by the fact that, in 1938, 17 per cent of the electric energy distributed was for residential use—as compared with only 9.7 per cent in 1926."

Market Opens Strong Following Holiday, but Prices Dip at Close; Bond Trading Higher and Active

New York, May 31.—Financial markets started the day well today, spurred by the higher prices which ruled in Europe when our markets were closed for the Memorial Day holiday, but the staying powers were poor and the close was off the minor amount of 0.06 point. Trading continued dull, even though traders had returned from their extended week-end.

Only 664,610 shares changed hands on the big board, which meant that the month went down on the record for the smallest volume of any month since September, 1934. May's volume of 12,935,210 shares was the lowest since the 12,635,870 shares of that September which was in turn the lowest since March, 1924.

Monthly Average Higher

During this time of extreme inactivity, the market, nevertheless, showed a good gain, helped largely by the stronger tone which developed during the closing half of the month. The above composite average showed a gain of 3 points. The previous time that the average showed as large a gain was in October, 1938, but at that time the market volume was 41,558,470 shares, or more than three times May's turnover.

From this a good case could be made out for the obvious fact that the market can move a sizable amount without the benefit of a large turnover. In the case of the trading during October, 1938, it was apparent that the public was in the market, judged by the volume of business. But in May of this year there appeared to be little public participation, judged by the small volume. Most of the trading appeared to be for the account of professionals. The public never creates a move; the usual course of events is for the public to come in on a move after it has been started by the professionals.

Rail Shares Improve

In the reaction which developed this afternoon, the rails held relatively better than the industrial groups. Followers of the rails were confronted with an unusually large number of developments, including announcement that Central of New Jersey will seek ICC approval of an interest-adjustment plan similar to those of Lehigh Valley and Baltimore & Ohio, the filing of an amended plan for the New Haven, and the action of Eastern roads in establishing reduced fares on round-trip tickets, the amount of reductions varying with the distances.

Fare Cuts a Concession

The latter, of course, was the most important. The change came in spite of recent insistence by some Eastern rail men that the increase to 2½ cents allowed by the ICC last July had produced good results in increased revenue. Concessions now made for the round-trip may be taken as indicating that the higher fares were not as effective as had been claimed. Opinion, even among rail men, was not uniform as to the benefits of the higher fares. This fact, coupled with recent reductions in the South and Southeast, probably led to the change. The basic one-way coach fare remains at 2½ cents a mile under the ICC ruling allowing an experiment of 18 months with the rate.

U. S. Rubber a Favorite

Railroad stocks were not particularly active although they were firm. The day's most active stock was United States Rubber, which has come to be one of the recent speculative favorites. It closed off a point. Steel and Bethlehem were down fractions while among the motors, General Motors lost 1¼ and Chrysler a fraction. Loft continued to be active among the specialties, gaining slightly. Socony-Vacuum was the leader of the oils, losing some ground, while Glenn Martin was popular in the aviation division.

Bond Trading Active

Bond trading on the Stock Exchange showed a strong tendency today and there was a small increase in the volume of business. The Herald Tribune index of 30 bonds showed a net advance of 0.10 after having been to a high 0.24 point above the Monday close during the early afternoon.

Carrier Liens Strong

Speculative rails showed the most strength, advancing on a broad front. Better grade carrier liens were irregular and industrial and utility issues advanced only fractionally. The Government list was slow with small gains predominating. Foreign bonds were generally strong with many issues advancing a point or more.

Active trading at generally higher prices took place in Southern Railway, Southern Pacific, New York Central and Baltimore & Ohio bonds. Atlantic Coast Line, Milwaukee Great Northern and Northern Pacific issues were better on light dealings.

Steel Bonds Higher

Republic Steel 4½s of 1956 advanced 1 point, Wheeling Steel issues were strong and New York Tap Rock 6s were up 2 points. Armelee 6s jumped 3 points on a single trade.

Among the utilities that showed strength were American & Foreign Power 5s, that reach a new high, and Montana Power 3⅜s of 1975 advanced a full 3 points.

Time Business Index Advances for Week

New York, May 31 (AP).—Time magazine's index of business conditions advanced last week to 92.8 from 92.3 the previous week and 90.4 a year ago. The rise was attributed to increased spending in trade centers.

The index, which reports on underlying conditions likely to affect the volume of business, has advanced fractionally for four successive weeks.

Steel Output Advances to 52% Capacity

Iron Age Reports Most Indices Stage Gains

By the Associated Press.

New York, May 31.—Advances in all the important indices of iron and steel activity were noted today by Iron Age Magazine.

The steel industry publication observed: "Ingot production has gained 4 points to 52 per cent of the industry's capacity; additional blast furnaces that were banked during the recent coal tie-up have resumed, indicating that the May production total, which will be available next week, will exceed that of April; the steel scrap price composite of the Iron Age has advanced 13 cents to $14.21, and the Iron Age capital goods index has gained for the second consecutive week, now standing at 60.9 or 1.8 points above the low for the year thus far of 59.1 in the week ended May 13, and this has occurred in spite of the shrinkage in automobile assemblies.

"The gain in ingot production is by far the sharpest that has occurred in any week this year. This week's rate compares with an average of 54.14 per cent in the first quarter and is within 4 points of the highest week figure of the year—56 per cent in the week beginning March 12.

"Encouraged by the higher steel operating rates, scrap markets have taken on a tone of strength, even though not much mill buying is taking place. At Chicago, brokers are offering $13 and would probably quote $13.50 to consumers. At Pittsburgh the range in quotations has narrowed, while there has been an advance of 50 cents a ton at Cleveland and one of 25 cents at Youngstown, quotations in the latter market now being higher than those at Pittsburgh, an unusual situation.

"Another favorable sign is an expansion in the volume of fabricated structural steel awards, which this week total more than 35,000 tons, largest since the first week of January.

"Shipbuilding requirements are causing a steady flow of specifications to the mills, and they will be augmented by 9,400 tons to be used for eight submarines and eight destroyers that the Navy Department has allocated to its own yards and private builders.

"Tin plate orders are maintaining a steady operation averaging 70 per cent, with larger specifications expected during June."

Chicago Exchange Reports $42,228 Loss

Chicago, May 31 (AP).—The Chicago Stock Exchange reported today an operating loss of $42,228 for the fiscal year ended April 30, compared with a loss of $35,717 in the previous fiscal year. Income fell from $244,835 to $183,609, with all items except membership transfer fees showing a decrease.

Arthur M. Bets, chairman, said it was the opinion of the exchange that "functioning of the markets has been inadequate due to unnecessary restrictions."

"Economic and political conditions and the prevailing tax structures are undoubtedly the major factors determining the nature and extent of public participation in the securities markets," Betts said.

Unemployment In April Falls 2% Under March

New York, May 31.—Unemployment in the United States fell 2 per cent in April, but still remained above the 10,000,000 level, according to the monthly estimate of unemployment and employment of the Conference Board.

The figures released, which are subject to revision, show that there were 220,000 fewer jobless workers in April than there were in March, and 517,000 fewer than in February. The declines during March and April leave the unemployment total at 10,177,000.

Workers gainfully occupied numbered 44,296,000, an increase of 0.6 per cent over the March figure. Besides agriculture, in which there was an increase of half a million workers, there was a rise in employment in forestry and fishing of 5.5 per cent; one in construction of 3 per cent, and seasonal rises in trade and distribution, of 0.5 per cent and in public utilities, of 0.6 per cent. In all other activities there were slight losses, except in mining, where employment fell off 36.4 per cent because of the coal dispute and strikes. The Government's labor force declined 8.6 per cent from the total for March, which was 3,319,000.

ADD SORROW of the great American Indian (or what went wrong with the filing system?), as quoted here from a press release dealing with a recent visit by the Yakima Indians from Washington State:

"The trip to the Capital was a business trip, not for pleasure, and the tribesmen were here as businessmen. First, there was a claim against the Federal Government for land they said was promised in the treaty of 1855 and not included in the reservation boundary. The Indians said they had been deprived of 112,000 acres, for the boundary map was lost in the Government files soon after it was made and did not turn up until 1930." Could somebody have filed this map up his sleeve?

AT LEAST two jobs would be affected by the resignation Representative Randolph, of West Virginia, has intimated that he might tender as Washington's mayor. One of these would be the secretary of the House District Committee and the other the clerk, both incumbents being from West Virginia. The secretary to Representative Randolph is secretary to the committee, holding two positions, while the clerk would be subject to appointment by a new chairman.

CONSOLIDATION of the Bureau of Lighthouses with the Coast Guard, under the President's reorganization plan No. 2, is causing some fears among Lighthouse Bureau personnel over their status under the new setup. It has been said officially that some "temporary readjustments" may be necessary. The whole situation will be discussed at a meeting of lighthouse service employes to be held under auspices of the U. F. W. A. at 4 o'clock this afternoon, in room 7320, Finance Division.

Bob Burns Says—

I've been readin' about how they're teachin' the youngsters every type of profession there is in the schools and colleges nowadays. Education is mighty important sometimes. When I was in the army I had to take a bunch of Arkansas mules over to France for them French mule skinners. And you know them mules wasn't worth their salt until they were educated to understand, "Gee," "Haw," "Whoa," "Giddyap," and some cuss words in French.

I figgered that night-school would do Grandpaw Snazzy some good the last time he was out here. One night the teacher said, "Snazzy, do you know what a rhetorical question is?"

Snazzy said, "Sure. It's when a question is asked and you don't expect an answer because there ain't no answer. Like 'What's Congress been doin' all these years?'"

Listen to Bob Burns tonight on WRC—between 9 P. M. and 10 P. M.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

A repetition of the sensational events that took place at the Vanderbilt Cup championship when a tournament director's ruling was reversed has occurred concerning the outcome of the Northern Virginia tournament held recently at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria.

At the Northern Virginia tournament it was James H. Lemon, of Washington, president of the American Contract Bridge League, who, with his partner, John D. Mothershed, was first ruled against by the director. Thomas Hamlin, now president of the Washington Bridge League, was Mr. Lemon's opponent on the disputed board.

Mr. Lemon's protest to the laws committee has been upheld, which gives him and his partner the title and displaces Mrs. F. W. Harrison, of Norfolk, and E. Jaffe, of Washington, who were first announced the winners.

The protest concerned a small slam at diamonds which had been doubled. Mr. Mothershed, the declarer, after losing the first trick, spread his cards and claimed the balance, which was conceded by Mr. Hamlin and his partner, Louis R. Watson, jr., and the hand was scored.

A post mortem revealed that there was a losing trick in the slam hand.

The first score was destroyed and the tournament director, C. F. Waltman, was called. He ruled that the small slam was set one trick. A new score was made, signed and entered on the score sheet. The result lost the event for Mr. Lemon and Mr. Mothershed by the narrow margin of two match points.

They were not satisfied with the director's ruling, however, and entered a protest to the Northern Virginia tournament committee. The committee upheld the director, and Mr. Lemon and Mr. Mothershed then referred the question to the league and the protest was upheld.

While the protest concerning the northern Virginia open pair championship was hanging fire, Mrs. Josephine Culbertson, with three new teammates, was winning the Canadian-American team-of-four championship. Mrs. Culbertson's partner was Charlton Wallace, jr., of Cincinnati; their teammates were Percy E. Sheardown and Donald G. Farquharson, of Toronto.

A hand which contributed to the points won by the champions is shown in today's box. Mrs. Culbertson executed the Deschapelle coup to defeat declarer's three no-trump contract.

Wallace led the deuce of spades. Mrs. Culbertson won with the ace and immediately shifted to the club king, forfeiting a sure club trick in order to drive out the club ace on the board, which would be an entry for the diamonds after that suit was established.

Against this defense West was unable to make his contract. Mrs. Culbertson held off the first round of diamonds, rendering it useless to declarer.

North and South set three no-trump two tricks, collecting a spade, two hearts, a diamond and two club tricks.

CHAPTER XXV.

Everything Peg found out about the Damara case she heard from Joan, who in turn had heard it from Anthony at luncheons or parties. For Anthony did not come back to the house in Georgetown that next morning or any day in the weeks that followed. Peg learned some things from reading the newspapers and some from sitting in at Aunt Mehalie's tea parties. Indeed, the whole of Washington was standing on its staid old head over the case.

Peg learned that neither of the Damaras had been tried as spies for reasons best known to the authorities. She knew that inside of the card, concealed between its smooth, deceptive sides, Military Intelligence had found a thin silk slip with information of deadly importance to any potential enemy of the United States. She knew that in the shabby room of the Imperial Hotel the intelligence men had found maps, pamphlets, blueprints, photographs and that one of them had been almost electrocuted on a wired button which had been placed to protect certain papers. There wasn't the slightest doubt that Nadeja and Emmanuel Damara were spies. And Peg learned finally, as the days slid past, that they had paid a $10,000 fine each and had been deported. They were at the moment on the high seas.

Anthony Evades Peg

For days Peg had tried to see Anthony. Always on her lunch hour she would go to the restaurant where Anthony usually ate. She took to picketing the State Department, but could not bring about an accidental meeting with him.

But not once did she see him; not once did he come to the house in Georgetown. Twice Peg suggested to Joan that they have Anthony out for dinner. "Aunt Mehalie misses him," she had offered as an excuse. But each time Joan reported, unsuspectingly, "Evangeline's having a dinner tonight. Taking Anthony and her guests to the National afterward," or "Anthony has a date with Evangeline."

Joan was lost in a lovely cloud of her own these days, Peg knew. She and Duncan—who had completely got over Nadeja Damara—were going places and doing things.

Over and over during the day at the office Peg would look at the telephone and fancy herself picking up the instrument and calling Anthony's number, and saying: "Anthony, I've got to see you. I want to tell you that I love you. To remind you that once you said you'd be waiting—always."

But she never did it because she was too proud and because in her heart she believed with a sick, cold conviction that Anthony wasn't waiting; that he no longer cared. Perhaps he had been, she told herself miserably, just as wrong in thinking he loved me as I was in thinking I lover Hewitt.

Distracting News

And then, on February 15 Peg learned exactly how Anthony Covington felt about Evangeline Martin. She was in the office that morning when Mr. Nelson came out of his suite and handed Peg a newspaper.

It was folded back carefully to the social section, to a picture of a fragile looking blonde girl with enormous eyes and darkly sweeping lashes, with fair hair brushed smoothly from a high forehead, with lips that were soft and curved and gently tipped at the corners.

Beneath the photograph was the announcement of Miss Evangeline Martin's engagement to Anthony Covington, of the State Department.

Mr. Nelson was saying brightly: "That's the chap you picked up at the auction that day, isn't it, Peg?"

Peg looked up from the paper and her lips went through the motions of a smile. Her fingers were icy, but her heart did not betray her by a single hurried beat.

She said, steadying her mouth and smiling at him: "Yes it is, Mr. Nelson." She dropped her stricken eyes back to the paper. "Evangeline Martin is very lovely, isn't she? She's—they're both very lucky."

Mr. Nelson said: "Quite romantic, isn't it, Peg? Those two, I mean. Meeting in Shanghai last year. Going through that bombing together. And then meeting again in Washington. Real story book stuff. And speaking of the auction, Peg, you haven't been over since I had the Van Dyke reframed, have you? I had it placed over the mantel in the library. Got a nice lighting effect on it. I'd like you and Hewitt and Aunt Mehalie to see it now. I'll call Aunt Mehalie one evening soon and have you all over to dinner. How's that?"

Peg said: "That will be nice, Mr. Nelson." And her voice sounded as if it would be nice. But she wasn't really thinking about the invitation; she was remembering that once she had stood before the Van Dyke with Anthony and had been terrifically happy.

News of Hewitt

Mr. Nelson's voice cut across her thoughts like a knife cutting a string of pearls. "Speaking of romance," he said, "I bet you're glad Hewitt will be back today!"

Peg looked at Mr. Nelson, feeling a swift rush of amazement through her brain. Even as she and her godfather talked about Hewitt and then about business, Peg was realizing that she hadn't really thought of Hewitt in days. She had had an almost daily letter from him which she had read with scarcely vague interest.

There had been one letter which had bordered on a tone of abusiveness. "What's the big idea?" he had wanted to know in his clear black writing. "Why did you reverse the information on that Josiah Bates' card? As a result of that unreasonable practical joke, I had a cocktail, glass and all, thrown in my face."

In subsequent letters Hewitt had been contrite and worried about her silence. "Forget what I said about the Josiah Bates' card, darling. I didn't mean to scold, but for the life of me I couldn't understand why you did it. But that's over and done with now and I have dismissed the whole unpleasant incident. Darling, do you know, I haven't had a letter from you in a week and not once have I been able to get you on the telephone."

There had been other letters referring to the wedding: "Only a month now, sweet. As soon as I come back we'll announce our engagement. That'll be on the fifteenth, you know. I'm taking the plane. I'll arrive at the Washington airport about 10:30 a. m."

He had, of course, expected her to meet him. And until Mr. Nelson had mentioned Hewitt she had quite forgotten that this was the fifteenth of February, that Hewitt would return from Florida at 10:30. She hadn't in the least made up her mind how she was going to tell him that everything was changed. She hadn't planned anything except not marrying Hewitt.

More than two weeks ago she had put his diamond back into its heart-shaped plush box, had snapped the lid firmly and had known that she would never open it again. Even as she had done it she had hoped about Anthony. She had told herself that Anthony would certainly come one day soon to Aunt Mehalie's, that he would see her bare third finger and then . . . ! But Anthony hadn't come and now his engagement was being announced to Evangeline Martin.

Hewitt Learns Truth

Hewitt Gill's plane was a half-hour late. He didn't get to the office until nearly noon. The minute he opened the office door and Peg lifted her blue-black eyes to his, he knew.

He came into the room slowly, put his airplane cases down and flung his newspaper across them. His gaze moved from Peg's quiet little face to her bare left hand. Then he said simply: "So it's like that, is it? No letters in two weeks. You're not wearing my ring. You didn't meet me at the airport. It all adds up, doesn't it? Look here, Peg, if some gossip drifted up to Washington about Thalia and me, it didn't mean a thing. I saw a lot of her, of course. I told you in my letters precisely what was going on. But it was entirely business."

Peg said, her voice completely even and dispassionate: "I didn't hear a thing about you and Thalia, Hewitt. It's simply that—Oh, Hewitt, this is hard to tell you. I don't like to hurt you. But I—I can't marry you. I think I knew it first that afternoon in your apartment when I was going through the cards on your desk. I felt different then. Something happened to me—inside. And then later—just a little while later that night—I knew that I didn't love you. That I never had loved you, really."

Hewitt stood across from her desk as she spoke, his hands dug down in his pockets. His dark eyes blazed furiously. "It's Anthony Covington, isn't it? There are a lot of things quite clear now that weren't in the least clear, before!"

And then, all at once, Hewitt bent a little and lifted the newspaper off his luggage. He opened the paper with a vicious movement of his hands and flung it down on her desk, front page out. Peg looked at the headlines and her eyes widened, her lips well apart.

School Normal After Dr. Smith Left, Aide Says

Dr. James Lewald Tells Commissioners Order Restored in 2 Weeks

Conditions at the National Training School for Girls returned to normalcy within two weeks after the dismissal of Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, the Commissioners were told yesterday when hearings on the former superintendent's ouster were resumed.

Dr. James Lewald, superintendent of the District Training School for the Feeble-Minded at Laurel, Md., who was designated acting superintendent at the school after Dr. Smith's dismissal a year and a half ago, said order was restored within that period.

Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman of the Board of Public Welfare, said the former superintendent—according to welfare records—had taken 130 days leave in her 20 months at the school, although "she was only entitled to 50 days."

Dr. Smith Tells of Conditions

The board chairman heard Dr. Smith read a long list of conditions at the school when she took over in February, 1936, and then was asked for a comment by her. He replied, "It's grossly exaggerated." She informed him the list had been prepared by Elwood Street, former welfare director.

McReynolds also said Dr. Smith had been offered a chance to resign before the dismissal order was submitted.

Other high lights of yesterday's hearing were:

Mrs. Spencer Gordon, chairman of the child welfare committee of the welfare board, said her committee "liked, in general, the ideas of Dr. Smith when she was first hired." Shortly after Dr. Smith came to the school, "I began to hear of troubles," Mrs. Gordon said.

"Good Ideas"

Dr. Smith's regime contained "good ideas but were badly administered," Mrs. Gordon said. She stated Dr. Smith was "too lenient."

McReynolds acted on the recommendation of Miss Katharine Lenroot, head of the Childrens Bureau, Labor Department, in approving Dr. Smith's appointment.

Paul L. Kirby, acting welfare director, will be the first witness this morning at 10 a. m. Following his testimony, Dr. Smith will begin with her witnesses. She expects to have Capt. Rhoda Millikan of the Womens' Bureau, as her first witness.

Foreign Traffic Men Astounded As Police Escorts Pass Lights

Trip From Station Thrills British Convention Delegate

By Howard F. Wentworth.

The way Washington police on escort duty disregarded red traffic lights yesterday "astounded" delegates to the International Association of Recognized Automobile Clubs who open convention sessions today at the Shoreham Hotel.

Col. F. Lindsay Lloyd, of Great Britain, one of the 79 association members escorted by motorcycle police from Union Station to the Shoreham, said the trip was a big thrill.

"We would not tolerate our police 'crashing' red lights," he said.

Light Cycle Held Too Short

Here with representatives from 32 countries to iron out international motoring problems, Col. Lloyd also struck at the American system of regulating traffic signals.

"The cycle of lights—I mean the period during which red and green signals are left on—is far too short for comfortable travel . . . especially in Washington," he said.

Called by Thomas P. Henry, president of the American Automobile Association, the meeting has as its primary purpose the elimination of unnecessary "red tape" for motorists crossing international boundaries.

War and Traffic

According to Vicomte de Rohan, of France, president of the association, and his chief assistant, Comte de Liedekerke-Beufort, motorists from "the States" traveling through Europe last year numbered 4,000.

Asked if the present war scare abroad had lessened auto travel by residents of the United States, Comte Liedekerke said:

"Your country seems to be the only place affected by all this war talk. Yes, I have noticed that travel from your country in the past few months has fallen off—but I don't believe it will remain that way long.

Safety Abroad

Vicomte de Rohan forsaw a time when the entire world will be linked by motor travel. He cited three modern highways which have recently been completed and are being used to cement international good will—from New York to Buenos Aires, from the Mediterranean to Capetown, South Africa, and from Turkey to Afghanistan.

More and more, said the French delegates, motorists in foreign countries are awakening to the problem of highway safety.

Although 4,000 persons were killed in France last year, this year's record is far behind that of 1938, said French delegates.
